INTRODUCTION.

WHILST engaged on the Translations contained in these volumes, and on the Notes appended to the various Tales, I have found myself led unavoidably into a much more extensive course of reading than I had originally contemplated, and one much of which bears directly upon the earlier mediæval Romance.

Before commencing these labours, I was aware, generally, that there existed a connexion between the Welsh Mabinogion and the Romance of the Continent; but as I advanced, I became better acquainted with the closeness and extent of that connexion, its history, and the proofs by which it is supported.

At the same time, indeed, I became aware, and still strongly feel, that it is one thing to collect facts, and quite another to classify and draw from them their legitimate conclusions; and though I am loth that what has been collected with some pains, should be entirely thrown away, it is unwillingly, and with diffidence, that I trespass beyond the acknowledged province of a translator.

Digitized by Google

In the twelfth and thirteenth centuries there arose into general notoriety in Europe, a body of "Romance," which in various forms retained its popularity till the Reformation. In it the plot, the incidents, the characters, were almost wholly those of Chivalry, that bond which united the warriors of France, Spain, and Italy, with those of pure Teutonic descent, and embraced more or less firmly all the nations of Europe, excepting only the Sclavonic races, not yet risen to power, and the Celts who had fallen from it. It is not difficult to account for this latter omission. The Celts, driven from the plains into the mountains and islands, preserved their liberty, and hated their oppressors with fierce, and not causeless hatred. A proud and free people, isolated both in country and language, were not likely to adopt customs which implied brotherhood with their foes.

Such being the case, it is remarkable that when the chief romances are examined, the name of many of the heroes and their scenes of action are found to be Celtic, and those of persons and places famous in the traditions of Wales and Brittany. Of this the romances of Ywaine and Gawaine, Sir Percival de Galles, Eric and Enide, Mort d'Arthur, Sir Lancelot, Sir Tristrem, the Graal, &c., may be cited as examples. In some cases a tendency to triads, and other matters of internal evidence, point in the same direction.

It may seem difficult to account for this. Although the ancient dominion of the Celts over Europe is not without enduring evidence in the names of the mountains and streams, the great features of a country, yet the loss of their prior language by the great mass of the Celtic nations in southern Europe, (if indeed their successors in territory be at all of their blood,) prevents us from clearly seeing, and makes us wonder, how stories, originally embodied in the Celtic dialects of great Britain and France, could so influence the literature of nations to whom the Celtic languages were utterly unknown. Whence then came these internal marks, and these proper names of persons and places, the features of a story usually of earliest date and least likely to change?

These romances were found in England, France, Germany, Norway, Sweden, and even Iceland, as early as the beginning of the thirteenth and end of the twelfth century. The Germans, who propagated them through the nations of the North, derived them certainly from France. Robert Wace published his Anglo-Norman Romance of the Brut d'Angleterre about 1155. Sir Tristrem was written in French prose in 1170; and The Chevalier au Lion, Chevalier De L'Epée, and Sir Lancelot du Lac, in metrical French, by Chrestien de Troyes, before 1200.

From these facts it is to be argued that the further back these romances are traced, the more clearly does it appear that they spread over the Continent from the North-west of France. The older versions, it may be remarked, are far more simple than the later corruptions. In them the adventures attributed to the heroes are less marvellous, there is less allusion to the habits and usages of Chivalry, and the Welsh names and elements stand out in stronger relief. It is a great step to be able to trace the stocks of these romances back to Wace, or to his country and age. For Wace's work was not original. He himself, a native of Jersey, appears to have derived much of it from the "Historia Britonum" of Gruffydd ab Arthur, commonly known as "Geoffrey of Monmouth," born 1128, who himself professes to have translated from a British original. It is however very possible that Wace may have had access, like Geoffrey, to independent sources of information.

To the claims set up on behalf of Wace and Geoffrey, to be regarded as the channels by which the Cymric tales passed into the Continental romance, may be added those of a third almost contemporary author. Layamon, a Saxon priest, dwelling, about 1200, upon the banks of the upper Severn, acknowledges for the source of his British history, the English Bede, the Latin Albin, and the French Wace. The latter however is by very much his chief, and, for Welsh matters, his only avowed authority. His book, nevertheless, contains a number of names and stories relating to Wales, of which no traces appear in Wace, or indeed in Geoffrey, but which he was certainly in a very favourable position to obtain for himself. Layamon, therefore, not only confirms Geoffrey in some points, but it is clear, that, professing to follow Wace, he had independent access to the great body of Welsh literature then current. Sir F. Madden has put this matter forth very clearly, in his recent edition of Layamon. The Abbé de la Rue, also, was of opinion that Gaimar, an Anglo-Norman, in the reign of Stephen, usually regarded as a translator of Geoffrey of Monmouth, had access to a Welsh independent authority.

In addition to these, is to be mentioned the English version of Sir Tristrem, which Sir Walter Scott considered to be derived from a distinct Celtic source, and not, like the later Amadis, Palmerin, and Lord Berners's Canon of Romance, imported into English literature by translation from the French. For the Auntours of Arthur, recently published by the Camden Society, their Editor, Mr. Robson, seems to hint at a similar claim.

Here then are various known channels, by which portions of Welsh and Armoric fiction crossed the Celtic border, and gave rise to the more ornate, and widely spread romance of the age of chivalry. It is not improbable that there may have existed many others. It appears then that a large portion of the stocks of mediæval Romance proceeded from Wales. We have next to see in what condition they are still found in that country.

That Wales possessed an ancient literature, containing various lyric compositions, and certain triads, in which are arranged historical facts or moral aphorisms, has been shewn by Sharon Turner, who has established the high antiquity of many of these compositions.

The more strictly Romantic Literature of Wales, has been less fortunate, though not less deserving of critical attention. Small portions only of it have hitherto appeared in print, the remainder being still hidden in the obscurity of ancient Manuscripts; of these the chief is supposed to be the Red Book of Hergest, now in the Library of Jesus College, Oxford, and of the fourteenth century. This contains, besides poems, the prose romances known as Mabinogion. The Black Book of Caermarthen, preserved at Hengwrt, and considered not to be of later date than the twelfth century, is said to contain poems only.*

The Mabinogion however, though thus early recorded in the Welsh tongue, are in their existing form by no means wholly Welsh. They are of two tolerably distinct classes. Of these, the older contains few allusions to Norman customs, manners, arts, arms, and luxuries. The other, and less ancient, are full of such allusions, and of ecclesiastical terms. Both classes, no doubt, are equally of Welsh root, but the former are not more overlaid or corrupted, than might have been expected, from the communication that so early took place between the Normans and the Welsh; whereas the latter probably migrated from Wales, and were brought back and retranslated after an absence of centuries, with a load of Norman additions. Kilhwch and Olwen, and the Dream of Rhonabwy, may be cited as examples of the older and purer class; Iarlles y Ffynnawn, Peredur, and Geraint ab Erbin, of the later, or decorated.

* It is also stated, that there is in the Hengwrt Library, a MS. containing the Graal in Welsh, as early as the time of Henry the I. I had hoped to have added this to the present collection; but the death of Col. Vaughan, to whom I applied, and other subsequent circumstances, have prevented me from obtaining access to it.

Besides these, indeed, there are a few tales, as Amlyn and Amic, Sir Bevis of Hamtoun, the Seven Wise Masters, and the Story of Charlemagne, so obviously of foreign extraction, and of late introduction into Wales, not presenting even a Welsh name, or allusion, and of such very slender intrinsic merit, that although comprised in the Llyvr Coch, they have not a shadow of claim to form part of the Canon of Welsh Romance. Therefore, although I have translated and examined them, I have given them no place in these volumes.

There is one argument in favour of the high antiquity in Wales of many of the Mabinogion, which deserves to be mentioned here. This argument is founded on the topography of the country. It is found that Saxon names of places are very frequently definitions of the nature of the locality to which they are attached, as Clifton, Deepden, Bridge-ford, Thorpe, Ham, Wick, and the like; whereas those of Wales are more frequently commemorative of some event, real or supposed, said to have happened on or near the spot, or bearing allusion to some person renowned in the story of the country, or district. Such are "Llyn y Morwynion," the Lake of the Maidens; "Rhyd y Bedd," the Ford of the Grave; "Bryn Cyfergyr," the Hill of Assault; and so on. But as these names could not have preceded the events to which they refer, the events themselves must be not unfrequently as old as the early settlement in the country. And as some of these events and fictions are the subjects of, and are explained by, existing Welsh legends, it follows that the legends must be, in some shape or other, of very remote antiquity. It will be observed that this argument supports remote antiquity only for such legends as are connected with the greater topographical features, as mountains, lakes, rivers, seas, which must have been named at an early period in the inhabitation of the country by man. But there exist, also, legends connected with the lesser features, as pools, hills, detached rocks, caves, fords, and the like, places not necessarily named by the earlier settlers, but the names of which are, nevertheless, probably very old, since the words of which they are composed, are in many cases not retained in the colloquial tongue, in which they must once have been included, and are in some instances lost from the language altogether, so much so as to be only partially explicable even by scholars. The argument applies likewise, in their degree, to camps, barrows, and other artificial earth-works.

Digitized by Google

Conclusions thus drawn, when established, rest upon a very firm basis. They depend upon the number and appositeness of the facts, and it would be very interesting to pursue this branch of evidence in detail. In following up this idea, the names to be sought for might thus be classed:—

I. Names of the great features, involving proper names and actions.

Cadair Idris and Cadair Arthur, both involve more than a mere name. Idris and Arthur must have been invested with heroic qualifications to have been placed in such "seats."

II. Names of lesser features, as "Bryn y Saeth," Hill of the dart; "Llyn Llyngclys," Lake of the engulphed Court; "Ceven y Bedd," the Ridge of the Grave; "Rhyd y Saeson," the Saxons' Ford.

Digitized by Google

III. Names of mixed natural and artificial objects, as "Coeten Arthur," Arthur's Coit; "Cerrig y Drudion," the Craig of the Heroes; which involve actions. And such as embody proper names only, as "Cerrig Howel," the Craig of Howel; "Caer Arianrod," the Camp of Arianrod; "Bron Goronwy," the Breast (of the Hill) of Goronwy; "Castell mab Wynion," the Castle of the son of Wynion; "Nant Gwrtheyrn," the Rill of Vortigern.

The selection of names would demand much care and discretion. The translations should be indisputable, and, where known, the connexion of a name with a legend should be noted. Such a name as "Moch-drev," Swine-town, would be valueless unless accompanied by a legend.

It is always valuable to find a place or work, called after an individual, because, it may help to support some tradition of his existence or his actions. But it is requisite that care be taken not to push the etymological dissection too far. Thus, "Caer Arianrod," should be taken simply as the "Camp of Arianrod," and not rendered the "Camp of the silver circle," because the latter, though it might possibly have some thing to do with the reason for which the name was borne by Arianrod herself, had clearly no reference to its application to her camp.

It appears to me, then, looking back upon what has been advanced.:—

I. That we have throughout Europe, at an early period, a great body of literature, known as Mediæval Romance, which, amidst much that is wholly of Teutonic origin and character includes certain well marked traces of an older Celtic nucleus.

II. Proceeding backwards in time, we find these romances, their ornaments falling away at each step, existing towards the twelfth century, of simpler structure, and with less encumbered Celtic features, in the works of Wace, and other Bards of the Langue d'Oil.

III. We find that Geoffrey of Monmouth, Layamon, and other early British and Anglo Saxon historians, and minstrels, on the one hand, transmitted to Europe the rudiments of its after romance, much of which, on the other hand, they drew from Wales.

IV. Crossing into Wales we find, in the Mabinogion, the evident counterpart of the Celtic portion of the continental romance, mixed up, indeed, with various reflex additions from beyond the border, but still containing ample internal evidence of a Welsh original.

V. Looking at the connexion between divers of the more ancient Mabinogion, and the topographical nomenclature of part of the country, we find evidence of the great, though indefinite, antiquity of these tales, and of an origin, which, if not indigenous, is certainly derived from no European nation.

It was with a general belief in some of these conclusions, that I commenced my labours, and I end them with my impressions strongly confirmed. The subject is one not unworthy of the talents of a Llwyd or a Prichard. It might, I think, be shewn, by pursuing the enquiry, that the Cymric nation is not only, as Dr. Prichard has proved it to be, an early off-shoot of the Indo-European family, and a people of unmixed descent, but that when driven out of their conquests by the later nations, the names and exploits of their heroes, and the compositions of their bards, spread far and wide among the invaders, and affected intimately their tastes and literature for many centuries, and that it has strong claims to be considered the cradle of European Romance.

TO IVOR AND MERTHYR.

My dear Children,

Infants as you yet are, I feel that I cannot dedicate more fitly than to you these venerable relics of ancient lore, and I do so in the hope of inciting you to cultivate the Literature of "Gwyllt Walia," in whose beautiful language you are being initiated, and amongst whose free mountains you were born.

May you become early imbued with the chivalric and exalted sense of honour, and the fervent patriotism for which its sons have ever been celebrated.

May you learn to emulate the noble qualities of Ivor Hael, and the firm attachment to your Native Country, which distinguished that Ivor Bach, after whom the elder of you was named,

I am,

Your affectionate Mother,

C. E. GUEST.

PREFACE.

On presenting to the Public the first part of the Mabinogion, it is necessary to give some account of the Llyfr Coch o Hergest, or Red Book of Hergest, in which these curious relics of ancient Literature are preserved. This very valuable Welsh MS. exists in the Library of Jesus College, Oxford, and consists of a folio volume, containing 721 pages, written in double columns, upon vellum. It comprises, amongst other things, a considerable collection of Mabinogion; some, like the present story, having the character of chivalric Romances, and others bearing the impress of far higher antiquity, both as regards the manners they depict, and the style of language in which they are composed. So greatly do these Mabinogion differ in character, that they may be considered as forming two distinct classes, one of which generally celebrates heroes of the Arthurian Cyclus, while the other refers to personages and events of an earlier period.

At the end of the Llyfr Coch are some poems bearing the name of Lewis Glyn Cothi, who flourished at the close of the 15th Century. This circumstance has given rise to an idea, that the whole of the MS. (which is said to have been transcribed from one of still more ancient date) is in the hand-writing of the Bard himself; but it is more probable, that, like most others of that period, it is from the hand of professed Scribes, more particularly, as it bears the appearance of having been written by various persons, and at different times.

A copy of the Mabinogion in the Llyfr Coch was taken about twenty years ago, by the Rev. John Jones, of Christ Church, Oxford, (Tegid,) for Mr. Justice Bosanquet, to whose kindness I am indebted for the use of it upon the present occasion; and it is from a Transcript of this Copy that the Tale now offered to the Public is printed, having been carefully collated with the original in Jesus College, by Mr. Jones, to whom I am under great obligations for the trouble he has taken to forward my wishes, with respect to publishing the MS. as correctly as possible.*

* It will be observed, by the Facsimile, that the letter W is almost always represented by a character somewhat resembling a V, and I have also the pleasure of here rendering my warmest acknowledgments to a distinguished French Littèrateur, M. le Comte de la Villemarqué, to whom my best thanks are due, for the kindness and alacrity with which he furnished me with a Transcript of the "Chevalier au Lion," from an original MS. in the Bibliothéque du Roi. And likewise to his learned and much respected countryman, M. Le Gonidec, for the valuable assistance he afforded me in facilitating my access to this MS. The "Chevalier au Lion" is attributed to Chrestien de Troyes, who is well known to have flourished at the close of the 12th Century, and who is the author of several similar productions. As it has never hitherto appeared in print, and as the story it relates is the same with that of the Lady of the Fountain, the whole of this Romance is given at the end of the Notes. And it is the more interesting to the English Reader, from the circumstance of the Metrical Version of "Ywaine and Gawin," which is frequently seen in Welsh MSS. As this would have no value in an orthographical point of view, being invariably put for the same letter, and would probably only serve to perplex the Welsh reader, I have thought it best in every instance to use the modern W. This is the only deviation of any kind which I have permitted myself to make.

(published by Ritson, Met. Rom. 1802,) having evidently been taken from it, and almost word for word. It would be needless to reprint what is to be found among Ritson's Works, which are, or ought to be, in the hands of all true lovers of ancient English lore, I have therefore contented myself with making occasional references to Ywain and Gawin, and with giving a facsimile of a portion of the original MS. from which it is taken, and which is still preserved in the British Museum. A similar specimen of the "Chevalier au Lion" is also added.

It may be considered rash in one who has but recently become acquainted with the Principality and its Literature, to engage in a work like the present, while there are so many others, by whom it would be much more ably executed. At the hazard, however, of incurring such an imputation, I have ventured upon this undertaking, in order to gratify the desire so generally and repeatedly expressed for the publication of these interesting remains.

DIWEDD.

THE LADY OF THE FOUNTAIN.

KING Arthur was at Caerlleon upon Usk; and one day he sat in his chamber; and with him were Owain the son of Urien, and Kynon the son of Clydno, and Kai the son of Kyner; and Gwenhwyvar and her hand-maidens at needlework by the window. And if it should be said that there was a porter at Arthur's palace, there was none. Glewlwyd Gavaelvawr was there, acting as porter, to welcome guests and strangers, and to receive them with honour, and to inform them of the manners and customs of the Court; and to direct those who came to the Hall or to the presence Chamber, and those who came to take up their lodging.

In the centre of the chamber, king Arthur sat, upon a seat of green rushes, over which was spread a covering of flame coloured satin; and a cushion of red satin was under his elbow.

Then Arthur spoke, "If I thought you would not disparage me," said he, "I would sleep while I wait for my repast; and you can entertain one another with relating tales, and can obtain a flagon of mead and some meat from Kai." And the King went to sleep. And Kynon the son of Clydno, asked Kai for that which Arthur had promised them. "I too will have the good tale which he promised to me," said Kai. "Nay," answered Kynon, "fairer will it be for thee to fulfil Arthur's behest in the first place, and then we will tell thee the best tale that we know." So Kai went to the kitchen and to the mead-cellar, and returned, bearing a flagon of mead, and a golden goblet, and a handful of skewers upon which were broiled collops of meat. Then they ate the collops and began to drink the mead. "Now," said Kai, "it is time for you to give me my story." "Kynon," said Owain, "do thou pay to Kai the tale that is his due." "Truly," said Kynon, "thou art older, and art a better teller of tales, and hast seen more marvellous things than I; do thou therefore pay Kai his tale." "Begin thy self," quoth Owain, "with the best that thou knowest." "I will do so," answered Kynon.

"I was the only son of my mother and father; and I was exceedingly aspiring, and my daring was very great. I thought there was no enterprise in the world too mighty for me, and after I had achieved all the adventures that were in my own country, I equipped myself, and set forth to journey through deserts, and distant regions. And at length it chanced that I came to the fairest valley in the world, wherein were trees of equal growth; and a river ran through the valley, and a path was by the side of the river. And I followed the path until mid-day, and continued my journey along the remainder of the valley until the evening; and at the extremity of a plain I came to a large and lustrous Castle, at the foot of which was a torrent. And I approached the Castle, and there I beheld two youths, with yellow curling hair, each with a frontlet of gold upon his head, and clad in a garment of yellow satin; and they had gold clasps upon their insteps. In the hand of each of them was an ivory bow, strung with the sinews of the stag; and their arrows had their shafts of the bone of the whale, and were winged with peacock's feathers. The shafts also had golden heads. And they had daggers with blades of gold, and with hilts of the bone of the whale. And they were shooting their daggers.

"And a little way from them, I saw a man in the prime of life, with his beard newly shorn, clad in a robe and a mantle of yellow satin; and round the top of his mantle was a band of gold lace. On his feet were shoes of variegated leather, fastened by two bosses of gold. When I saw him, I went towards him, and saluted him; and such was his courtesy, that he no sooner received my greeting than he returned it. And he went with me towards the Castle. Now there were no dwellers in the Castle except those who were in one hall. And there I saw four and twenty damsels, embroidering satin, at a window. And this I tell thee, Kai, that the least fair of them was fairer than the fairest maid thou didst ever behold, in the Island of Britain; and the least lovely of them was more lovely than Gwenhwyvar, the wife of Arthur, when she appeared loveliest at the Offering, on the day of the Nativity, or at the feast of Easter. They rose up at my coming, and six of them took my horse, and divested me of my armour; and six others took my arms, and washed them in a vessel, until they were perfectly bright. And the third six spread cloths upon the tables, and prepared meat. And the fourth six took off my soiled garments, and placed others upon me; namely, an under vest and a doublet of fine linen, and a robe, and a surcoat, and a mantle of yellow satin, with a broad gold band upon the mantle. And they placed cushions both beneath and around me, with coverings of red linen. And I sat down. Now the six maidens who had taken my horse, unharnessed him, as well as if they had been the best Squires in the Island of Britain. Then, behold, they brought bowls of silver wherein was water to wash; and towels of linen, some green and some white; and I washed. And in a little while the man sat down to the table. And I sat next to him, and below me sat all the maidens, except those who waited on us. And the table was of silver; and the cloths upon the table were of linen. And no vessel was served upon the table, that was not either of gold, or of silver, or of buffalo horn. And our meat was brought to us. And verily, Kai, I saw there every sort of meat, and every sort of liquor, that I ever saw elsewhere; but the meat and the liquor were better served there, than I ever saw them in any other place.

"Until the repast was half over, neither the man nor any one of the damsels spoke a single word to me; but when the man perceived that it would be more agreeable to me to converse, than to eat any more, he began to enquire of me who I was. I said I was glad to find that there was some one who would discourse with me, and that it was not considered so great a crime at that Court, for people to hold converse together. 'Chieftain,' said the man, 'we would have talked to thee sooner, but we feared to disturb thee during thy repast. Now, however, we will discourse.' Then I told the man who I was, and what was the cause of my journey. And said that I was seeking whether any one was superior to me, or whether I could gain the mastery over all. The man looked upon me, and he smiled, and said, 'If I did not fear to distress thee too much, I would shew thee that which thou seekest.' Upon this I became anxious, and sorrowful; and when the man perceived it, he said, 'If thou wouldest rather that I should shew thee thy disadvantage, than thine advantage, I will do so. Sleep here to-night, and in the morning, arise early, and take the road upwards through the valley, until thou reachest the wood, through which thou camest hither. A little way within the wood, thou wilt meet with a road, branching off to the right; by which thou must proceed, until thou comest to a large sheltered glade, with a mound in the centre. And thou wilt see a black man of great stature, on the top of the mound; he is not smaller in size than two of the men of this world. He has but one foot, and one eye, in the middle of his forehead. And he has a club of iron, and it is certain that there are no two men in the world, who would not find their burden in that club. And he is not a comely man, but on the contrary he is exceedingly ill-favoured; and he is the woodward of that wood. And thou wilt see a thousand wild animals, grazing around him. Enquire of him the way out of the glade, and he will reply to thee briefly, and will point out the road, by which thou shalt find that which thou art in quest of.'

"And long seemed that night to me. And the next morning I arose, and equipped myself, and mounted my horse, and proceeded straight through the valley, to the wood, and I followed the cross-road which the man had pointed out to me, till at length I arrived at the glade. And there was

I three times more astonished at the number of wild animals that I beheld, than the man had said I should be. And the black man was there, sitting upon the top of the mound. Huge of stature as the man had told me that he was, I found him to exceed by far the description he had given me of him. As for the iron club, which the man had told me was a burden for two men, I am certain, Kai, that it would be a heavy weight for four warriors to lift. And this was in the black man's hand. And he only spoke to me in answer to my questions. Then I asked him what power he held over those animals. 'I will shew thee, little man,' said he. And he took his club in his hand, and with it he struck a stag a great blow, so that he brayed vehemently, and at his braying the animals came together, as numerous as the stars in the sky, so that it was difficult for me to find room in the glade, to stand among them. There were serpents, and dragons, and divers sorts of animals. And he looked at them, and bade them go and feed. And they bowed their heads, and did him homage, as vassals to their lord.

"Then the black man said to me, 'Seest thou now, little man, what power I hold over these animals?' Then I enquired of him the way; and he became very rough in his manner to me; however he asked me whither I would go. And when I had told him who I was, and what I sought, he directed me. 'Take,' said he, 'that path that leads towards the head of the glade, and ascend the wooded steep, until thou comest to its summit; and there thou wilt find an open space, like to a large valley, and in the midst of it a tall tree, whose branches are greener than the greenest pine trees. Under this tree is a fountain, and by the side of the fountain, a marble slab; and on the marble slab, a silver bowl, attached by a chain of silver, so that it may not be carried away. Take the bowl, and throw a bowlful of water upon the slab, and thou wilt hear a mighty peal of thunder; so that thou wilt think that heaven and earth are trembling with its fury. With the thunder there will come a shower so severe, that it will be scarce possible for thee to endure it and live. And the shower will be of hailstones. And after the shower, the weather will become fair; but every leaf that was upon the tree will have been carried away by the shower. Then a flight of birds will come and alight upon the tree; and in thine own country thou didst never hear a strain so sweet, as that which they will sing. And at the moment thou art most delighted with the song of the birds, thou wilt hear a murmuring and complaining coming towards thee along the valley. And thou wilt see a knight upon a coal black horse, clothed in black velvet, and with a pennon of black linen upon his lance, and he will ride unto thee to encounter thee, with the utmost speed. If thou fleest from him he will overtake thee, and if thou abidest there, as sure as thou art a mounted knight, he will leave thee on foot. And if thou dost not find trouble in that adventure, thou needest not seek it during the rest of thy life."

"So I journeyed on, until I reached the summit of the steep. And there I found every thing, as the black man had described it to me. And I went up to the tree, and beneath it I saw the fountain, and by its side the marble slab; and the silver bowl fastened by the chain. Then I took the bowl, and cast a bowlful of water upon the slab; and thereupon behold the thunder came, much more violent than the black man had led me to expect; and after the thunder came the shower; and of a truth I tell thee, Kai, that there is neither man nor beast that could endure that shower, and live. For not one of those hail-stones would be stopped either by the flesh, or by the skin, until it had reached the bone. I turned my horse's flank towards the shower, and placed the beak of my shield over his head and neck, while I held the upper part of it over my own head. And thus I withstood the shower. When I looked on the tree, there was not a single leaf upon it, and then the sky became clear; and with that, behold the birds lighted upon the tree, and sang. And truly, Kai, I never heard any melody equal to that, either before or since. And when I was most charmed with listening to the birds, lo, a murmuring voice was heard through the valley, approaching me, and saying, 'Oh, Knight, what has brought thee hither? What evil have I done to thee, that thou shouldst act towards me and my possessions, as thou hast this day? Dost thou not know that the shower to-day has left in my dominions neither man nor beast alive, that was exposed to it?' And thereupon, behold a Knight on a black horse appeared, clothed in jet black velvet, and with a tabard of black linen about him. And we charged each other; and as the onset was furious, it was not long before I was overthrown. Then the Knight passed the shaft of his lance through the bridle rein of my horse, and rode off with the two horses; leaving me where I was. And he did not even bestow so much notice upon me, as to imprison me, nor did he despoil me of my arms. So I returned along the road by which I had come. And when I reached the glade where the black man was, I confess to thee, Kai, it is a marvel that I did not melt down into a liquid pool, through the shame that I felt at the black man's derision. And that night I came to the same Castle, where I had spent the night preceding. And I was more agreeably entertained that night, than I had been the night before; and I was better feasted, and I conversed freely with the inmates of the Castle; and none of them alluded to my expedition to the fountain, neither did I mention it to any. And I remained there that night. When I arose on the morrow, I found ready saddled a dark-bay palfrey, with nostrils as red as scarlet. And after putting on my armour, and leaving there my blessing, I returned to my own Court. And that horse I still possess, and he is in the stable yonder. And I declare that I would not part with him for the best palfrey in the Island of Britain.

Now of a truth, Kai, no man ever before confessed to an adventure so much to his own discredit; and verily it seems strange to me, that neither before nor since have I heard of any person, besides myself, who knew of this adventure, and that the subject of it should exist within King Arthur's dominions, without any other person lighting upon it."

"Now," quoth Owain, "would it not be well to go and endeavour to discover that place?"

"By the hand of my friend," said Kai, "often dost thou utter that with thy tongue, which thou wouldst not make good with thy deeds."

"In very truth," said Gwenhwyvar, "it were better thou wert hanged, Kai, than to use such uncourteous speech towards a man like Owain."

"By the hand of my friend, good Lady," said Kai, "thy praise of Owain is not greater than mine."

With that Arthur awoke, and asked if he had not been sleeping a little.

"Yes, Lord," answered Owain, "thou hast slept awhile."

"Is it time for us to go to meat?"

"It is, Lord," said Owain.

Then the horn for washing was sounded, and the King and all his household sat down to eat. And when the meal was ended, Owain withdrew to his lodging, and made ready his horse and his arms.

On the morrow, with the dawn of day, he put on his armour, and mounted his charger, and travelled through distant lands, and over desert mountains. And at length he arrived at the valley which Kynon had described to him; and he was certain that it was the same that he sought. And journeying along the valley, by the side of the river, he followed its course till he came to the plain, and within sight of the Castle. When he approached the Castle, he saw the youths shooting their daggers, in the place where Kynon had seen them; and the yellow man, to whom the Castle belonged, standing hard by. And no sooner had Owain saluted the yellow man, than he was saluted by him in return.

And he went forward towards the Castle, and there he saw the chamber; and when he had entered the chamber, he beheld the maidens working at satin embroidery, in chairs of gold. And their beauty, and their comeliness seemed to Owain far greater than Kynon had represented to him. And they arose to wait upon Owain, as they had done to Kynon. And the meal which they set before him, gave more satisfaction to Owain than it had done to Kynon.

About the middle of the repast, the yellow man asked Owain the object of his journey. And Owain made it known to him, and said, "I am in quest of the Knight who guards the fountain." Upon this, the yellow man smiled, and said that he was as loth to point out that adventure to Owain, as he had been to Kynon. However he described the whole to Owain, and they retired to rest.

The next morning Owain found his horse made ready for him by the damsels, and he set forward and came to the glade where the black man was. And the stature of the black man seemed more wonderful to Owain, than it had done to Kynon, and Owain asked of him his road, and he shewed it to him. And Owain followed the road, as Kynon had done, till he came to the green tree; and he beheld the fountain, and the slab beside the fountain, with the bowl upon it. And Owain took the bowl, and threw a bowlful of water upon the slab. And, lo, the thunder was heard, and after the thunder came the shower, much more violent than Kynon had described, and after the shower, the sky became bright. And when Owain looked at the tree, there was not one leaf upon it. And immediately the birds came, and settled upon the tree, and sang. And when their song was most pleasing to Owain, he beheld a Knight coming towards him through the valley, and he prepared to receive him; and encountered him violently. Having broken both their lances, they drew their swords, and fought blade to blade. Then Owain struck the Knight a blow through his helmet, head piece and visor, and through the skin, and the flesh, and the bone, until it wounded the very brain. Then the black Knight felt that he had received a mortal wound, upon which he turned his horse's head, and fled. And Owain pursued him, and followed close upon him, although he was not near enough to strike him with his sword. Thereupon Owain descried a vast and resplendent Castle. And they came to the Castle gate. And the black Knight was allowed to enter, and the portcullis was let fall upon Owain; and it struck his horse behind the saddle, and cut him in two, and carried away the rowels of the spurs that were upon Owain's heels. And the portcullis descended to the floor. And the rowels of the spurs and part of the horse were without, and Owain, with the other part of the horse remained between the two gates, and the inner gate was closed, so that Owain could not go thence; and Owain was in a perplexing situation. And while he was in this state, he could see through an aperture in the gate, a street facing him, with a row of houses on each side. And he beheld a maiden, with yellow curling hair, and a frontlet of gold upon her head; and she was clad in a dress of yellow satin, and on her feet were shoes of variegated leather. And she approached the gate, and desired that it should be opened. "Heaven knows, Lady," said Owain, "it is no more possible for me to open to thee from hence, than it is for thee to set me free." "Truly," said the damsel, "it is very sad that thou canst not be released, and every woman ought to succour thee, for I never saw one more faithful in the service of ladies than thou. As a friend thou art the most sincere, and as a lover the most devoted." "Therefore," quoth she, "whatever is in my power to do for thy release, I will do it. Take this ring and put it on thy finger, with the stone inside thy hand; and close thy hand upon the stone. And as long as thou concealest it, it will conceal thee. When they have consulted together, they will come forth to fetch thee, in order to put thee to death; and they will be much grieved that they cannot find thee. And I will await thee on the horseblock yonder; and thou wilt be able to see me, though I cannot see thee; therefore come and place thy hand upon my shoulder, that I may know that thou art near me. And by the way that I go hence, do thou accompany me.

Then she went away from Owain, and he did all that the maiden had told him. And the people of the Castle came to seek Owain, to put him to death, and when they found nothing but the half of his horse, they were sorely grieved.

And Owain vanished from among them, and went to the maiden, and placed his hand upon her shoulder, whereupon she set off, and Owain followed her, until they came to the door of a large and beautiful chamber, and the maiden opened it, and they went in, and closed the door. And Owain looked around the chamber, and behold there was not even a single nail in it, that was not painted with gorgeous colours; and there was not a single pannel, that had not sundry images in gold portrayed upon it.

The maiden kindled a fire, and took water in a silver bowl, and put a towel of white linen on her shoulder, and gave Owain water to wash. Then she placed before him a silver table, inlaid with gold; upon which was a cloth of yellow linen; and she brought him food. And of a truth, Owain never saw any kind of meat that was not there in abundance, but it was better cooked there, than he ever found it in any other place. Nor did he ever see so excellent a display of meat and drink, as there. And there was not one vessel from which he was served, that was not of gold, or of silver. And Owain ate and drank, until late in the afternoon, when lo, they heard a mighty clamour in the Castle; and Owain asked the maiden what that outcry was. "They are administering extreme unction," said she, "to the Nobleman who owns the Castle." And Owain went to sleep.

The couch which the maiden had prepared for him was meet for Arthur himself; it was of scarlet, and fur, and satin, and sendall, and fine linen. In the middle of the night they heard a woful outcry; "What outcry again is this?" said Owain. "The Nobleman who owned the Castle is now dead," said the maiden. And a little after daybreak, they heard an exceeding loud clamour and wailing. And Owain asked the maiden what was the cause of it. "They are bearing to the church, the body of the Nobleman who owned the Castle."

And Owain rose up, and clothed himself, and opened a window of the chamber, and looked towards the Castle; and he could see neither the bounds, nor the extent of the hosts that filled the streets. And they were fully armed; and a vast number of women were with them, both on horseback, and on foot; and all the ecclesiastics in the city, singing. And it seemed to Owain that the sky resounded with the vehemence of their cries, and with the noise of the trumpets, and with the singing of the ecclesiastics. In the midst of the throng, he beheld the bier, over which was a veil of white linen; and wax tapers were burning beside, and around it, and none that supported the bier was lower in rank than a powerful Baron.

Never did Owain see an assemblage so gorgeous with satin, and silk, and sendall. And following the train, he beheld a lady with yellow hair falling over her shoulders, and stained with blood; and about her a dress of yellow satin, which was torn. Upon her feet were shoes of variegated leather. And it was a marvel that the ends of her fingers were not bruised, from the violence with which she smote her hands together. Truly she would have been the fairest lady Owain ever saw, had she been in her usual guise. And her cry was louder than the shout of the men, or the clamour of the trumpets. No sooner had he beheld the lady, than he became inflamed with her love, so that it took entire possession of him.

Then he enquired of the maiden who the lady was. "Heaven knows," replied the maiden, "she may be said to be the fairest, and the most chaste, and the most liberal, and the wisest, and the most noble of women. And she is my mistress; and she is called the Countess of the Fountain, the wife of him whom thou didst slay yesterday." "Verily," said Owain, "she is the woman that I love best." "Verily," said the maiden, "she shall also love thee not a little."

And with that the maid arose, and kindled a fire, and filled a pot with water, and placed it to warm; and she brought a towel of white linen, and placed it around Owain's neck; and she took a goblet of ivory, and a silver basin, and filled them with warm water, wherewith she washed Owain's head. Then she opened a wooden casket, and drew forth a razor, whose haft was of ivory, and upon which were two rivets of gold. And she shaved his beard, and she dried his head, and his throat, with the towel. Then she rose up from before Owain, and brought him to eat. And truly Owain had never so good a meal, nor was he ever so well served.

When he had finished his repast, the maiden arranged his couch. "Come here," said she, "and sleep, and I will go and woo for thee." And Owain went to sleep, and the maiden shut the door of the chamber, after her, and went towards the Castle. When she came there, she found nothing but mourning, and sorrow; and the Countess in her chamber could not bear the sight of any one through grief. Luned came and saluted her, but the Countess answered her not. And the maiden bent down towards her, and said, "What aileth thee, that thou answerest no one to-day?" "Luned," said the Countess, "what change hath befallen thee, that thou hast not come to visit me in my grief? It was wrong in thee, and I having made thee rich; it was wrong in thee that thou didst not come to see me in my distress. That was wrong in thee." "Truly," said Luned, "I thought thy good sense was greater than I find it to be. Is it well for thee to mourn after that good man, or for any thing else, that thou canst not have?" "I declare to heaven," said the Countess, "that in the whole world there is not a man equal to him." "Not so," said Luned, "for an ugly man would be as good as, or better than he." "I declare to heaven," said the Countess, "that were it not repugnant to me to cause to be put to death one whom I have brought up, I would have thee executed, for making such a comparison to me. As it is, I will banish thee." "I am glad," said Luned, "that thou hast no other cause to do so, than that I would have been of service to thee where thou didst not know what was to thine advantage. And henceforth evil betide whichever of us shall make the first advance towards reconciliation to the other; whether I should seek an invitation from thee, or thou of thine own accord shouldst send to invite me."

With that Luned went forth: and the Countess arose and followed her to the door of the chamber, and began coughing loudly. And when Luned looked back, the Countess beckoned to her; and she returned to the Countess. "In truth," said the Countess, "evil is thy disposition; but if thou knowest what is to my advantage, declare it to me." "I will do so," quoth she.

"Thou knowest that except by warfare and arms it is impossible for thee to preserve thy possessions; delay not, therefore, to seek some one who can defend them." "And how can I do that?" said the Countess. "I will tell thee," said Luned, "unless thou canst defend the fountain, thou canst not maintain thy dominions; and no one can defend the fountain, except it be a knight of Arthur's household; and I will go to Arthur's court, and ill betide me, if I return thence without a warrior who can guard the fountain, as well as, or even better, than he who defended it formerly." "That will be hard to perform," said the Countess. "Go, however, and make proof of that which thou hast promised."

Luned set out, under the pretence of going to Arthur's court; but she went back to the chamber where she had left Owain; and she tarried there with him as long as it might have taken her to have travelled to the Court of King Arthur. And at the end of that time, she apparelled herself, and went to visit the Countess. And the Countess was much rejoiced when she saw her, and enquired what news she brought from the Court. "I bring thee the best of news," said Luned, "for I have compassed the object of my mission. When wilt thou, that I should present to thee the chieftain who has come with me hither?" "Bring him here to visit me to-morrow, at mid-day," said the Countess, "and I will cause the town to be assembled by that time."

And Luned returned home. And the next day, at noon, Owain arrayed himself in a coat, and a surcoat, and a mantle of yellow satin, upon which was a broad band of gold lace; and on his feet were high shoes of variegated leather, which were fastened by golden clasps, in the form of lions. And they proceeded to the chamber of the Countess.

Right glad was the Countess of their coming. And she gazed steadfastly upon Owain, and said, "Luned, this knight has not the look of a traveller." "What harm is there in that, Lady?" said Luned. "I am certain," said the Countess, "that no other man than this, chased the soul from the body of my lord." "So much the better for thee, Lady," said Luned, "for had he not been stronger than thy lord, he could not have deprived him of life. There is no remedy for that which is past, be it as it may." "Go back to thine abode," said the Countess, "and I will take counsel."

The next day, the Countess caused all her subjects to assemble, and shewed them that her Earldom was left defenceless, and that it could not be protected but with horse and arms, and military skill. "Therefore," said she, "this is what I offer for your choice; either let one of you take me, or give your consent for me to take a husband from elsewhere, to defend my dominions."

So they came to the determination, that it was better that she should have permission to marry some one from elsewhere; and thereupon she sent for the Bishops, and Archbishops, to celebrate her nuptials with Owain. And the men of the Earldom did Owain homage.

And Owain defended the Fountain with lance and sword. And this is the manner in which he defended it. Whensoever a knight came there, he overthrew him, and sold him for his full worth. And what he thus gained, he divided among his Barons, and his Knights; and no man in the whole world could be more beloved than he was by his subjects. And it was thus for the space of three years.

It befell that as Gwalchmai went forth one day with King Arthur, he perceived him to be very sad, and sorrowful. And Gwalchmai was much grieved to see Arthur in this state; and he questioned him, saying, "Oh, my Lord! what has befallen thee?" "In sooth, Gwalchmai," said Arthur, "I am grieved concerning Owain, whom I have lost these three years; and I shall certainly die, if the fourth year passes without my seeing him. Now I am sure, that it is through the tale which Kynon the son of Clydno related, that I have lost Owain." "There is no need for thee," said Gwalchmai, "to summon to arms thy whole dominions, on this account; for thou thyself, and the men of thy household, will be able to avenge Owain, if he be slain; or to set him free, if he be in prison; and if alive, to bring him back with thee." And it was settled, according to what Gwalchmai had said.

Then Arthur and the men of his household prepared to go and seek Owain; and their number was three thousand, beside their attendants. And Kynon the son of Clydno acted as their guide. And Arthur came to the Castle, where Kynon had been before. And when he came there the youths were shooting in the same place, and the yellow man was standing hard by. When the yellow man saw Arthur, he greeted him, and invited him to the Castle. And Arthur accepted his invitation, and they entered the Castle together. And great as was the number of his retinue, their presence was scarcely observed in the Castle, so vast was its extent. And the maidens rose up to wait on them. And the service of the maidens appeared to them all, to excel any attendance they had ever met with; and even the pages who had charge of the horses, were no worse served, that night, than Arthur himself would have been, in his own Palace.

The next morning, Arthur set out thence, with Kynon for his guide, and came to the place where the black man was. And the stature of the black man was more surprising to Arthur, than it had been represented to him. And they came to the top of the wooded steep, and traversed the valley, till they reached the green tree; where they saw the fountain, and the bowl and the slab. And upon that, Kai came to Arthur, and spoke to him. "My Lord," said he, "I know the meaning of all this, and my request is, that thou wilt permit me to throw the water on the slab, and to receive the first adventure that may befall." And Arthur gave him leave.

Then Kai threw a bowlful of water upon the slab, and immediately there came the thunder, and after the thunder the shower. And such a thunderstorm they had never known before. And many of the attendants who were in Arthur's train were killed by the shower. After the shower had ceased, the sky became clear. And on looking at the tree, they beheld it completely leafless. Then the birds descended upon the tree. And the song of the birds was far sweeter than any strain they had ever heard before. Then they beheld a Knight, on a coal black horse, clothed in black satin, coming rapidly towards them. And Kai met him and encountered him, and it was not long before Kai was overthrown. And the Knight withdrew. And Arthur and his host encamped for the night.

And when they arose in the morning, they perceived the signal of combat upon the lance of the Knight; and Kai came to Arthur, and spoke to him, "My Lord," said he, "Though I was overthrown yesterday, if it seem good to thee, I would gladly meet the Knight again to-day." "Thou mayst do so," said Arthur. And Kai went towards the Knight. And on the spot he overthrew Kai, and struck him with the head of his lance in the forehead, so that it broke his helmet and the headpiece, and pierced the skin, and the flesh, the breadth of the spear-head, even to the bone. And Kai returned to his companions.

After this, all the household of Arthur went forth, one after the other, to combat the Knight, until there was not one that was not overthrown by him, except Arthur and Gwalchmai. And Arthur armed himself to encounter the Knight. "O, my lord," said Gwalchmai, "permit me to fight with him first." And Arthur permitted him. And he went forth to meet the Knight, having over himself and his horse, a satin robe of honour which had been sent him by the daughter of the Earl of Rhangyw, and in this dress he was not known by any of the host. And they charged each other, and fought all that day until the evening. And neither of them was able to unhorse the other.

The next day they fought with strong lances; and neither of them could obtain the mastery.

And the third day they fought with exceeding strong lances. And they were incensed with rage, and fought furiously, even until noon. And they gave each other such a shock, that the girths of their horses were broken,' so that they fell over their horses' cruppers to the ground. And they rose up speedily, and drew their swords, and resumed the combat. And the multitude that witnessed their encounter felt assured that they had never before seen two men so valiant, or so powerful. And had it been mid-night, it would have been light from the fire that flashed from their weapons. And the Knight gave Gwalchmai a blow that turned his helmet from off his face, so that the Knight knew that it was Gwalchmai. Then Owain said, "My lord Gwalchmai, I did not know thee for my cousin, owing to the robe of honour that enveloped thee; take my sword and my arms." Said Gwalchmai, "Thou, Owain, art the victor; take thou my sword." And with that Arthur saw that they were conversing, and advanced towards them. "My lord Arthur," said Gwalchmai, "here is Owain, who has vanquished me, and will not take my arms." "My lord," said Owain, "it is he that has vanquished me, and he will not take my sword." "Give me your swords," said Arthur, "and then neither of you has vanquished the other." Then Owain put his arms around Arthur's neck, and they embraced. And all the host hurried forward to see Owain, and to embrace him. And there was nigh being a loss of life; so great was the press.

And they retired that night, and the next day Arthur prepared to depart. "My lord," said Owain, "This is not well of thee. For I have been absent from thee these three years, and during all that time, up to this very day, I have been preparing a banquet for thee, knowing that thou wouldest come to seek me. Tarry with me therefore, until thou and thy attendants have recovered the fatigues of the journey, and have been anointed."

And they all proceeded to the Castle of the Countess of the Fountain, and the banquet which had been three years preparing was consumed in three months. Never had they a more delicious, or agreeable banquet. And Arthur prepared to depart. Then he sent an embassy to the Countess, to beseech her to permit Owain to go with him, for the space of three months, that he might shew him to the nobles, and the fair dames of the Island of Britain. And the Countess gave her consent, although it was very painful to her. So Owain came with Arthur to the Island of Britain. And when he was once more amongst his kindred and friends, he remained three years, instead of three months, with them.

And as Owain one day sat at meat, in the City of Caerlleon upon Usk, behold a damsel entered, upon a bay horse, with a curling mane, and covered with foam; and the bridle, and as much as was seen of the saddle, were of gold. And the damsel was arrayed in a dress of yellow satin. And she came up to Owain, and took the ring from off his hand. "Thus," said she, "shall be treated the deceiver, the traitor, the faithless, the disgraced, and the beardless." And she turned her horse's head, and departed.

Then his adventure came to Owain's remembrance, and he was sorrowful. And having finished eating, he went to his own abode, and made preparations that night. And the next day he arose, but did not go to the court, but wandered to the distant parts of the earth, and to uncultivated mountains. And he remained there until all his apparel was worn out, and his body was wasted away, and his hair was grown long. And he went about with the wild beasts, and fed with them, until they became familiar with him. But at length he grew so weak, that he could no longer bear them company. Then he descended from the mountains to the valley, and came to a park, that was the fairest in the world, and belonged to a widowed Countess.

One day the Countess and her maidens went forth to walk by a lake, that was in the middle of the park. And they saw the form of a man. And they were terrified. Nevertheless they went near him, and touched him, and looked at him. And they saw that there was life in him, though he was exhausted by the heat of the sun. And the Countess returned to the Castle, and took a flask full of precious ointment, and gave it to one of her maidens. "Go with this," said she, "and take with thee yonder horse, and clothing, and place them near the man we saw just now. And anoint him with this balsam, near his heart; and if there is life in him, he will arise, through the efficacy of this balsam. Then watch what he will do."

And the maiden departed from her, and poured the whole of the balsam, upon Owain, and left the horse and the garments hard by, and went a little way off, and hid herself, to watch him. In a short time she saw him begin to move his arms; and he rose up, and looked at his person, and became ashamed of the unseemliness of his appearance. Then he perceived the horse and the garments, that were near him. And he crept forward till he was able to draw the garments to him from off the saddle. And he clothed himself, and with difficulty mounted the horse. Then the damsel discovered herself to him, and saluted him. And he was rejoiced when he saw her, and enquired of her, what land and what territory that was. "Truly," said the maiden, "a widowed Countess owns yonder Castle; at the death of her husband, he left her two Earldoms, but at this day she has but this one dwelling that has not been wrested from her, by a young Earl, who is her neighbour, because she refused to become his wife." "That is pity," said Owain. And he and the maiden proceeded to the Castle; and he alighted there, and the maiden conducted him to a pleasant chamber, and kindled a fire, and left him.

And the maiden came to the Countess, and gave the flask into her hand. "Ha! maiden," said the Countess, "where is all the balsam?" "Have I not used it all?" said she. "Oh, maiden," said the Countess, "I cannot easily forgive thee this; it is sad for me to have wasted seven-score pounds worth of precious ointment, upon a stranger whom I know not. However, maiden, wait thou upon him, until he is quite recovered."

And the maiden did so, and furnished him with meat and drink, and fire, and lodging, and medicaments, until he was well again. And in three months he was restored to his former guise, and became even more comely, than he had ever been before.

One day Owain heard a great tumult, and a sound of arms in the Castle, and he enquired of the maiden the cause thereof. "The Earl," said she, "whom I mentioned to thee, has come before the Castle, with a numerous army, to subdue the Countess." And Owain enquired of her whether the Countess had a horse and arms, in her possession. "She has the best in the world," said the maiden. "Wilt thou go and request the loan of a horse and arms for me," said Owain, "that I may go and look at this army?" "I will," said the maiden.

And she came to the Countess, and told her what Owain had said. And the Countess laughed. "Truly," said she, "I will even give him a horse and arms, for ever; such a horse and such arms, had he never yet, and I am glad that they should be taken by him to-day, lest my enemies should have them against my will to-morrow. Yet I know not what he would do with them."

The Countess bade them bring out a beautiful black steed, upon which was a beechen saddle, and a suit of armour, for man and horse. And Owain armed himself, and mounted the horse, and went forth, attended by two pages completely equipped, with horses and arms. And when they came near to the Earl's army, they could see neither its extent, nor its extremity. And Owain asked the pages in which troop the Earl was. "In yonder troop," said they, "in which are four yellow standards. Two of them are before, and two behind him." "Now," said Owain, "do you return and await me near the portal of the Castle." So they returned, and Owain pressed forward, until he met the Earl. And Owain drew him completely out of his saddle, and turned his horse's head towards the Castle, and, though it was with difficulty, he brought the Earl to the portal, where the pages awaited him. And in they came. And Owain presented the Earl as a gift to the Countess. And said to her, "Behold a requital to thee for thy blessed balsam."

The army encamped around the Castle. And the Earl restored to the Countess, the two Earldoms, he had taken from her, as a ransom for his life; and for his freedom, he gave her the half of his own dominions, and all his gold, and his silver, and his jewels, besides hostages.

And Owain took his departure. And the Countess and all her subjects besought him to remain, but Owain chose rather to wander through distant lands and deserts.

And as he journeyed, he heard a loud yelling in a wood. And it was repeated a second and a third time. And Owain went towards the spot, and beheld a huge craggy mound, in the middle of the wood; on the side of which was a grey rock. And there was a cleft in the rock, and a serpent was within the cleft. And near the rock, stood a black lion, and every time the lion sought to go thence, the serpent darted towards him to attack him. And Owain unsheathed his sword, and drew near to the rock; and as the serpent sprung out, he struck him with his sword, and cut him in two. And he dried his sword, and went on his way, as before. But behold the lion followed him, and played about him, as though it had been a greyhound, that he had reared.

They proceeded thus throughout the day, until the evening. And when it was time for Owain to take his rest, he dismounted, and turned his horse loose in a flat and wooded meadow. And he struck fire, and when the fire was kindled, the lion brought him fuel enough to last for three nights. And the lion disappeared. And presently the lion returned, bearing a fine large roebuck. And he threw it down before Owain, who went towards the fire with it.

And Owain took the roebuck, and skinned it, and placed collops of its flesh upon skewers, around the fire. The rest of the buck he gave to the lion to devour. While he was doing this, he heard a deep sigh near him, and a second, and a third. And Owain called out to know whether the sigh he heard proceeded from a mortal; and he received answer, that it did. "Who art thou?" said Owain. "Truly," said the voice, "I am Luned, the hand-maiden of the Countess of the Fountain." "And what dost thou here," said Owain. "I am imprisoned," said she, "on account of the knight who came from Arthur's Court, and married the Countess. And he staid a short time with her, but he afterwards departed for the Court of Arthur, and he has not returned since. And he was the friend I loved best in the world. And two of the pages of the Countess's chamber, traduced him, and called him a deceiver. And I told them that they two were not a match for him alone. So they imprisoned me in the stone vault, and said that I should be put to death, unless he came himself, to deliver me, by a certain day; and that is no further off, than the day after to-morrow. And I have no one to send to seek him for me. And his name is Owain the son of Urien." "And art thou certain, that if that knight knew all this, he would come to thy rescue?" "I am most certain of it," said she.

When the collops were cooked, Owain divided them into two parts, between himself and the maiden; and after they had eaten, they talked together, until the day dawned. And the next morning Owain enquired of the damsel, if there was any place where he could get food and entertainment for that night. "There is, lord," said she; "cross over yonder, and go along the side of the river, and in a short time, thou wilt see a great Castle, in which are many towers. And the Earl who owns that Castle, is the most hospitable man in the world. There thou mayst spend the night."

Never did sentinel keep stricter watch over his lord, than the lion that night over Owain.

And Owain accoutred his horse, and passed across by the ford, and came in sight of the Castle. And he entered it, and was honourably received. And his horse was well-cared for, and plenty of fodder was placed before him. Then the lion went and laid down in the horse's manger; so that none of the people of the Castle dared to approach him. The treatment which Owain met with there, was such as he had never known elsewhere, for every one was as sorrowful, as though death had been upon him. And they went to meat. And the Earl sat upon one side of Owain; and on the other side his only daughter. And Owain had never seen any more lovely than she. Then the lion came and placed himself between Owain's feet, and he fed him with every kind of food, that he took himself. And he never saw any thing equal to the sadness of the people.

In the middle of the repast, the Earl began to bid Owain welcome. "Then," said Owain, "behold it is time for thee to be cheerful." "Heaven knows," said the Earl, "that it is not thy coming that makes us sorrowful, but we have cause enough for sadness and care." "What is that?" said Owain. "I have two sons," replied the Earl, "and yesterday they went to the mountains to hunt. Now there is on the mountain a monster, who kills men, and devours them. And he seized my sons. And to-morrow is the time he has fixed to be here, and he threatens that he will then slay my sons before my eyes, unless I will deliver into his hands this my daughter. He has the form of a man, but in stature he is no less than a giant."

"Truly," said Owain, "that is lamentable. And which wilt thou do?" "Heaven knows," said the Earl, "it will be better that my sons should be slain, against my will, than I should voluntarily give up my daughter to him to ill-treat and destroy." Then they talked about other things, and Owain staid there that night.

The next morning, they heard an exceeding great clamour, which was caused by the coming of the giant, with the two youths. And the Earl was anxious both to protect his Castle, and to release his two sons. Then Owain put on his armour, and went forth to encounter the giant; and the lion followed him. And when the giant saw that Owain was armed, he rushed towards him, and attacked him. And the lion fought with the giant, much more fiercely than Owain did. "Truly," said the giant, "I should find no difficulty in fighting with thee, were it not for the animal that is with thee." Upon that Owain took the lion back to the Castle, and shut the gate upon him. And then he returned to fight the giant, as before. And the lion roared very loud, for he heard that it went hard with Owain. And he climbed up, till he reached the top of the Earl's Hall; and thence he got to the top of the Castle, and he sprang down from the walls, and went and joined Owain. And the lion gave the giant a stroke with his paw, which tore him from his shoulder to his hip, and his heart was laid bare. And the giant fell down dead. Then Owain restored the two youths to their father.

The Earl besought Owain to remain with him, and he would not, but set forward towards the meadow, where Luned was. And when he came there, he saw a great fire kindled, and two youths with beautiful curling auburn hair, were leading the maiden to cast her into the fire. And Owain asked them what charge they had against her. And they told him of the compact that was between them; as the maiden had done the night before. "And," said they, "Owain has failed her, therefore we are taking her to be burnt." "Truly," said Owain, "he is a good knight, and if he knew that the maiden was in such peril, I marvel that he came not to her rescue. But if you will accept me in his stead, I will do battle with you." "We will," said the youths, "by him who made us."

And they attacked Owain, and he was hard beset by them. And with that the lion came to Owain's assistance; and they two got the better of the young men. And they said to him, "Chieftain, it was not agreed that we should fight, save with thyself alone, and it is harder for us to contend with yonder animal, than with thee." And Owain put the lion in the place where the maiden had been imprisoned, and blocked up the door with stones. And he went to fight with the young men as before. But Owain had not his usual strength, and the two youths pressed hard upon him. And the lion roared incessantly at seeing Owain in trouble. And he burst through the wall, until he found a way out, and rushed upon the young men, and instantly slew them. So Luned was saved from being burned.

Then Owain returned with Luned, to the dominions of the Countess of the Fountain. And when he went thence, he took the Countess with him to Arthur's Court, and she was his wife as long as she lived.

And they took the road that led to the Court of the savage black man. And Owain fought with him, and the lion did not quit Owain, until he had vanquished him. And when he reached the Court of the savage black man, he entered the hall; and beheld four and twenty ladies, the fairest that could be seen. And the garments which they had on, were not worth four and twenty pence. And they were as sorrowful as death. And Owain asked them the cause of their sadness. And they said, "we are the daughters of Earls, and we all came here, with our husbands, whom we dearly loved. And we were received with honour and rejoicing. And we were thrown into a state of stupor, and while we were thus, the demon who owns this Castle, slew all our husbands, and took from us our horses, and our raiment, and our gold, and our silver. And the corpses of our husbands are still in this house, and many others with them. And this, Chieftain, is the cause of our grief, and we are sorry that thou art come hither, lest harm should befall thee."

And Owain was grieved, when he heard this. And he went forth from the Castle, and he beheld a Knight approaching him, who saluted him, in a friendly and cheerful manner, as if he had been a brother. And this was the savage black man. "In very sooth," said Owain, "it is not to seek thy friendship that I am here." "In sooth," said he, "thou shalt not find it then." And with that they charged each other, and fought furiously. And Owain overcame him, and bound his hands behind his back. Then the black savage besought Owain to spare his life, and spoke thus, "My lord Owain," said he, "it was foretold, that thou shouldst come hither and vanquish me, and thou hast done so. I was a robber here, and my house was a house of spoil. But grant me my life, and I will become the keeper of an Hospice, and I will maintain this house as an Hospice for weak and for strong, as long as I live, for the good of thy soul." And Owain accepted this proposal of him, and remained there that night.

And the next day he took the four and twenty ladies, and their horses, and their raiment, and what they possessed of goods, and jewels, and proceeded with them to Arthur's Court. And if Arthur was rejoiced when he saw him, after he had lost him the first time, his joy was now much greater. And of those ladies, such as wished to remain in Arthur's Court, remained there; and such as wished to depart, departed.

And thenceforward Owain dwelt at Arthur's Court, greatly beloved, as the head of his household, until he went away with his followers; and those were the army of three hundred ravens which Kenverchyn had left him. And wherever Owain went with these, he was victorious.

And this is the tale of THE LADY OF THE FOUNTAIN.

NOTES TO THE LADY OF THE FOUNTAIN.

Arthur.—Page 39.

Among the various characters introduced into the foregoing tale, none is more strictly and successfully maintained than that of Arthur. In him we see the dignified and noble hearted sovereign, the stately warrior, and the accomplished knight, courteous of demeanour, and dauntless in arms. And whilst the lofty bearing of the monarch himself excites our admiration, we are scarcely less struck with the devoted attachment evinced towards him by his Knights, who are ever solicitous that he should be the last to encounter danger, and ever ready themselves to dare the most perilous adventures, to maintain the dignity of his crown. But it is not merely the consistency observed in these several characters, that arrests our attention, in this and similar compositions, professing to record the achievements of Arthur and his Knights; we are also forcibly struck with the powerful influence which these legends exercised over society, and the ascendancy which their principal hero so decidedly maintained. Nor can we withhold our wonder at the singular destiny which has awaited this extraordinary being. Whilst by some his very existence has been called in question, his name has become celebrated throughout the civilized world, and his exploits, whether fabulous or real, have afforded the most ample and interesting materials to the poet, the antiquary, and the historian. To this very day the memory of the mighty warrior, "whose sword extended from Scandinavia to Spain," exercises a power over our imagination, which we are as unable as we are unwilling to dispel. His image adorned our earliest visions of Chivalry and Romance, and though the weightier cares of maturer age must supervene, they serve but to deepen, not to efface the impression; and while in the eddying stream of life we pause to look back upon the days when Caerleon and its Round Table formed to us an ideal world, we feel that in our hearts, at least, "King Arthur is not dead."

The real history of this chieftain is so veiled in obscurity, and has led to so much unsatisfactory discussion, that I shall in this place only consider him with reference to the position which he occupies in the regions of Fiction.

Amongst the many incidents of a highly imaginative character, in the legendary history of this hero, we may more particularly notice his introduction upon the scene of his exploits.

During the turbulent times which followed the death of Uther Pendragon, the nobles of Britain assembled to elect a successor to him; but after protracted debate they were unable to come to any decision upon the subject. At length a large stone was discovered near the place of assembly, in which was a sword fastened as it were in a sheath. Around it was an inscription in gold letters, signifying that whoever should draw out that sword, was rightful heir to the throne. After all those who were ambitious of this dignity had made the attempt in vain, Arthur, who was previously unknown, came forward, and drew out the sword from the stone as easily as he would have drawn it out of the scabbard. He was thereupon immediately acknowledged king.

Being thus placed at the head of the Chivalry of Britain, he proceeded in a glorious and triumphant career, until, by the treachery of his nephew, Modred, he sustained a defeat in the battle of Camlan.

After witnessing the destruction of his army in that fatal conflict, Arthur, finding himself mortally wounded, delivered his sword Caliburn to one of his knights, with a request that he would cast it into a certain lake. The knight, thus commissioned, proceeded to the appointed spot, and standing upon the bank, flung the sword forward with all his might. As it was descending, a hand and arm came out of the lake, and seizing it by the hilt, brandished it three times, and disappeared with it in the water.

Arthur was afterwards conducted by the knight to the border of the lake; where he found a little bark moored, in which were Viviane, the Lady of the Lake, and Morgan le fay, and other ladies, who carried him off to the Island of Avalon, in Fairy-Land, where it was affirmed that he was healed of his wounds, and continued to live in all the splendour of that luxurious country, waiting for the time when he should return once more to take possession of his ancient dominions.

In confirmation of this idea it was asserted that the place of his sepulture was not known. This tradition was current for many ages, and is found among the Welsh, in the Memorials of the Graves of the Warriors,—

"Bet y March bet y gwythur Bet y gugavn Cletyfrut Anoeth bit bet y Arthur."*

The grave of March is this, and this the grave of Gwythyr
Here is the grave of Gwgawn Gleddyfrudd
But unknown is the grave of Arthur.

Our English ears are so familiarized with the name of King Arthur, that it seems impossible to give him the appellation of Emperor, by which he is designated in the original Welsh, and to which, according to the old Romances, he was fully entitled, since once upon a time "at crystemas" he was crowned "Emperour with creme as it bylongeth to so hyhe astate." Morte d'Arthur.

We find the title of Emperor bestowed upon Arthur in Llywarch Hên's Elegy upon Geraint ab Erbin.

"Yn Llongborth llas i Arthur
Gwyr dewr cymmynynt a dur
Ammherawdyr llywiawdyr llavur."

At Llongborth were slain to Arthur
Valiant men, who hewed down with steel;
He was the emperor, and conductor of the toil of war.
Owen's Heroic Elegies.

Caerlleon upon Usk.—Page 39.

This place derives its name from the circumstance of its being the station of the second Legion, (Legio Secunda Augusta) during the dominion of the Romans. The name by which they originally called it was Isca Silurum, evidently from its situation upon the river Usk; but by later Latin writers it is named Urbs Legionum, which probably is a translation of the Welsh Caer-lleon, and not the original of that appellation. This place still exhibits many traces of Roman magnificence, and among others the remains of an amphitheatre. It is natural to suppose that, upon the departure of the Legions, Caerleon would attract the attention of the Native Sovereigns, who were at that time beginning to resume their power; accordingly, tradition informs us that it was the principal residence of King Arthur; and the Amphitheatre is still called Arthur's Round Table. In confirmation of this traditionary evidence, Nennius asserts that one of Arthur's battles was fought at Cairlion. In the English version of this tale, the opening scene is laid at Cardiff.

* March ap Meirchion, Gwythyr ap Greidiol, and Gwgawn Gleddyfrudd, were three of Arthur's Knights; the second of them was father to Queen Gwenhwyvar.

"He made a feste, the soth to say,
Opon the Witsononday,
At Kerdyf, that es in Wales."——line 17.

And on a subsequent occasion we find the City of Chester named.

"The kyng that time at Cester lay."——line 1567.

In the French Copy,

"Q' li rois cort a cestre tint."

Of Chester, it may be remarked, that it bears in Welsh the name of Caerlleon Gawr, which seems to indicate its having been the station of the twentieth Legion, called Legio Vicesima Valens Victrix, the word Gawr being nearly equivalent to the Latin Valens.

Owain the son of Urien.—Page 39.

Owain ab Urien Rheged.—Amongst all the characters of ancient British history, none is more interesting, or occupies a more conspicuous place, than the hero of this Tale. Urien his father was prince of Rheged, a district comprising the present Cumberland, and part of the adjacent country. His valour, and the consideration in which he was held, are a frequent theme of Bardic song; and form the subject of several very spirited odes by Taliesin, particularly those upon the battles of Gwenystrad and Argoed Llwyfein, which are given, with English Translations, in the Myvyrian Archaiology, i. 52, 3, 4. The name of Fflamddwyn, the flame-bearer, which occurs in these poems, is supposed to be that by which the Welsh designated Ida, the Anglian King of Northumberland. In the appendix to Gale's Nennius, it is mentioned that Urien was one of the four Northern Princes, who opposed the progress of Deodric the son of Ida, whom he besieged in the Island of Lindisfarne. The other princes were Rhydderch Hael, Gwallawc ap Llenawc, and Morcant;* the latter of whom being jealous of Urien's military skill, in which he is said to have excelled all the other kings, procured his assassination during the expedition.

According to Llywarch Hen's Elegy upon Urien Rheged, this event occured in a place called Aberlleu.†

The Triads mention Llovan Llawdivo as the assassin. Of him little is known; but that he was a person of some note is evident from the circumstance of his grave being recorded.

"Bedd Llovan Llawdivo Yn ar ro Venai yn y gwna ton tolo."

The grave of Llovan Llawdivo
Is on the strand of Menai, where makes the wave a sullen sound.‡

"The Genealogy of the Saints record that Urien came into South Wales, and was instrumental with the sons of Ceredig ab Cunedda, and his nephews, in expelling the Gwyddelians, who had gained a footing there from about the time of Maxen Wledig." Camb. Biog.

The old Romancers connect him with South Wales, and call him King Uryens of Gore, evidently intended for Gower in Glamorganshire.

* In the Life of St. Kentigern, mention is made of a wicked king of Strathclyde, called Morken. Perhaps he is the Morcant, who caused the death of Urien Rheged.

Probably it is through a confusion of names, by no means unusual in those days, that Urien's wife, Morgan le Fay, is by the old romancers accused of an attempt to assassinate him.

† Myv. Arch. i. 105. ‡ Myv. Arch. i. 78.

Thus it is recorded in Morte d'Arthur, "Thenne the Kyng remeued in to Walys, and lete crye a grete feste that it shold be holdyn at Pentecost after the incoronacion of hym at the Cyte of Carlyon, vnto the feste come kyng Lott of Lowthean, and of Orkeney with fiue C knygtes with hym. Also there come to the feste kynge Uryens of gore with four C knygtes with hym."

But to return to Owain; it appears from the manner in which he is always mentioned by contemporary Bards, that he greatly distinguished himself in his country's cause, subsequently to the death of his father, but with what ultimate success, we are not acquainted.

There exists an ancient Poem, printed among those of Taliesin, called the Elegy of Owain ap Urien, and containing several very beautiful and spirited passages. It commences,

"Enaid Owain ap Urien
Gobwyllid ei Ren
Oi Raid
Reged Udd ai cudd tromlas."

The soul of Owain ap Urien
May its Lord consider its exigencies.—
Reged's chief the green turf covers.

In the course of this Elegy, the Bard bursts forth with all the energy of the Awen,

"Cysgid Lloegr llydan nifer
A lleufer
Yn eu llygaid."

"Could England sleep with the light upon her eyes?"*

Alluding to the incessant warfare with which this chieftain, during his lifetime, had harassed his Saxon foes.

* This line, with the substitution of Cambria for Lloegria, was taken as the subject of a speech to rouse the Welsh to the due consideration of their literature, by the Rev. Thomas Price of Crickhowel, at the Meeting of the Cymreigyddion Society of Abergavenny, in the Autumn of 1835. The effect it produced was quite electric.

In the Myvyrian Archaiology, (II. 80.) we have the following Triad relating to him.

"Tri chat farchawc oedd yn llys Arthur: nid amgen Cadwr iarll Kernyw, a Llawnslot dy Lac,* ac Ywain ab Urien Rheget. Kynneddfau y rhai hyn oedd, ni chilynt nag er gwaew nag er saeth nag er kleddyf, ac ni chafas Arthur gywilydd mewn brwydyr y dydd i caffai ef weled eu hwynebeu ac am hynny i gelwit hwynt katvarchogion."

Three Knights of battle were in the Court of Arthur; Cadwr, the Earl of Cornwall; Lancelot du Lac; and Owain the son of Urien Rheged. And this was their characteristic, that they would not retreat from battle neither for Spear, nor for Arrow, nor for Sword, and Arthur never had shame in battle, the day he saw their faces there, and they were called the Knights of battle.

Owain is also mentioned with Rhun mab Maelgwn, and Rhufawn befr mab Deorath Wledig, as one of the Three blessed Kings. Tri gwyn Teyrn Ynys Prydain;† and in the 52nd Triad, we are informed that his Mother's name was Modron, the daughter of Afallach, and that he was born a twin with his sister Merwydd, or Morvyth, to whom Cynon ap Clydno's attachment is well known.

His place of sepulture is thus mentioned in the Graves of the Warriors.

"Bet Owein ap Urien ym Pedryal bid Dan guerid llan Morvael."

The grave of Owain ap Urien is of quadrangular form,
Under the turf of Llan Morvael.

* Lancelot du Lac is generally considered as an exception to the general rule, that all the heroes of the Arthurian Romances are of Welsh origin. But it has been suggested to me by a learned Antiquary, that this distinction does not really exist, the name of Lancelot being nothing more than a translation of Paladr-ddelit, (splintered spear,) which was the name of a knight of Arthur's Court, celebrated in the Triads.

† The arrangement of ancient pedigrees is at all times attended with difficulty, but vain indeed would be the attempt to reconcile the genealogies of Romance with those of history.

In Morte d'Arthur, Urien's Mother is Morgan le Fay, sister to King Arthur.

Frequent allusions are made to Owain by the Bards of the Middle Ages, especially by Lewis Glyn Cothi, who, in an ode to Gruffudd ap Nicholas, a powerful chieftain of Carmarthenshire, and one of the descendants of Urien Rheged, has, among other things, the following passage,

"Gruffydd ev a rydd dair o vrain unlliw
A llew gwyn i Owain." I. 133.

Gruffudd will give three ravens of one hue,
And a white lion to Owain, [his son.]

The Editor of the works of Glyn Cothi supposes that "this expression may allude to Griffith presenting his son with a shield, with his own arms emblazoned upon it, and the royal lion for a crest." The three ravens undoubtedly apply to the armorial bearings of Urien Rheged, which are still borne by his descendants of the House of Dynevor; the lion also may have been an heraldic bearing of the family, but I am inclined to think that the Bard here intended an allusion to one of the principal incidents of the Lady of the Fountain. That he was acquainted with this Tale is evident, from some lines occuring in one of his Poems, addressed to Thomas ap Philip of Picton Castle, in which Owain and Luned are mentioned together.

In the early French compositions, called Lays and Fabliaux, Owain's name frequently occurs. He is mentioned in the Lay of Lanfal, and in Court Mantel, where he is particularized for his love of dogs and hawks.

"Li rois prit par la destre main L'amiz monsegnor Ivain,
Qui au roi Urien fu filz,
Et bons chevaliers et hardiz
Qui tant ama chiens et oisiaux."
(Fab. MSS. du roi. n. 7615, fol. 114 recto, col. 3.)

He acts a conspicuous part in the Romances of the Round Table; and it is on such authority that St. Palaye celebrates him, "pour avoir introduit l'usage des fourrures on zibelines aux manteaux, des ceintures aux robes, et des boucles pour attacher les éperons et l'écu, et pour avoir encore inventé la mode des gants."

Kynon the son of Clydno.—Page 39.

Cynon ap Clydno Eiddin.—This ancient British Warrior is celebrated in the Triads as one of the Three wisely-counselling Knights of Arthur's Court.

"Tri chynghoriad farchawg oedd yn llys Arthur, nid amgen Kynon ap Clydno Eiddun; ac Aron ap Kynfarch ap Meirchion gul; a Llywarch hen ap Elidir Lydanwyn: ar tri marchawg hynny a oeddynt gynghorwyr i Arthur, pa ryw ryfel bynnag na bygwth a vae arno, hwynt ae kynghorynt hyd na chae neb y gorvod ar Arthur, ac am hynny i gorfu ef ar bob kenedloedd drwy dri pheth a oedd yn ei ganlyn, nid amgen gobeith da ac arfeu kyssegredig y rhai a ddanfones Iesu Grist iddaw, a rhinwedd ei filwyr: ac am hynny i gwiscodd ef ddeuddeg coron am ei ben, ac i bu ef amherawdyr yn Rhufain."

Three counselling Knights were in the Court of Arthur, which were Cynon the son of Clydno Eiddin, Aron the son of Kynfarch ap Meirchion gul, and Llywarch hen the son of Elidir Lydanwyn. And these three knights were the Counsellors of Arthur, and whatever dangers threatened him in any of his wars, they counselled him, so that none were able to overcome Arthur; and thus he conquered all the nations through three things which followed him; and these were, Good hope, and the consecrated arms which had been sent him, and the virtue of his warriors; and through these he came to wear twelve crowns upon his head, and he became Emperor of Rome.

And in another place it is added,

"Ac ni chaid amgen na llwydd i bob Cynghor o'u heiddaw a wnaed ac aflwydd a gaid lle bynnag nas gwneid yn oll eu cyngoreu."

And he had nothing but success when he acted by the advice which he received from them, and reverses when he did not follow their counsel.

Kynon is also called one of the three ardent Lovers, on account of his passion for Morvyth, daughter of Urien Rheged, and sister of Owain, the Hero of this Tale.

"Tri Serchawg Ynys Prydain, Caswallawn mab Beli am Flur merch Fugnach Gorr, a Thrystan Mab Tallwch am Essyllt gwreig March Meirchiawn ei ewythr, a Chynon ab Clydno Eiddun am Forwydd ferch Urien."

The three ardent lovers of the Island of Britain, Caswallawn the son of Beli for Flur the daughter of Mugnach Gorr, and Trystan the son of Talluch for Yseult the wife of March Meirchawn his uncle, and Kynon the son of Clydno Eiddin for Morvyth the daughter of Urien.

This warrior is mentioned by Aneurin,

"A Chynon ——
Mal brwyn yt gwyddynt rac y adaf
Mab Clytno clothir canaf y ty."

And Kynon —— like rushes they fell before his hand.——
O Son of Clydno, a song of lasting praise will I sing unto thee.

And it is probable that he was one of the three, who, together with the Bard himself, escaped from the disastrous battle of Cattraeth.

"Gwyr a aeth gatraeth buant enwawc,
Gwin a med o eur vu eu gwirawt,
Blwydyn eu erbyn urdyn deuawt,
Tri wyr a thri ugeint a thry chant eurdorchawc,
Or sawl yt gryssyassant uch gormant wirawt,
Ni diengys namyn tri o wrhydri fossawt,
Deu gatki aeron a chenon dayrawt.
A minheu om gwaetfreu gwerth vy gwennwawt."

The Warriors who went to Cattraeth were renowned;
Wine and Mead out of golden goblets was their beverage.
That year was to them one of exalted dignity,
Three Warriors and three score and three hundred, wearing the golden torques.——
Of those who marched forth after the excess of revelling;
But three escaped from the conflict of gashing weapons;
The two War-dogs of Aeron and Kynon the dauntless,
(And I myself from the spilling of blood) worthy are they of my song.

Gray has given a poetical version of this passage in his fragments, commencing with the words, "To Cattraeth's vale in glittering row."

Also, in another poem by Aneurin, named the Gwarchan (or Incantation) of Cynvelyn, are the following lines,

"Tri wyr a thrivgeint a thrychant,
Y vreithyell gatraeth yd aethant,
Or sawl yt gryssyassant uch med menestri,
Namen tri nyt atcorsant,
Kynon a chadreith, a chatlew o gatnant,
A minheu om creu dychiorant."

Three Warriors and three score and three hundred,
To the conflict of Cattraeth went forth.
Of those who hastened from the banquet of mead,
Three only returned,
Kynon, and Kadreith, and Katlew of catnant,
And I myself from the shedding of blood.

Kynon is frequently mentioned by the Bards of the Middle Ages, and celebrated, both for his bravery and for his devotion as a lover. It is in the latter character that he is alluded to by Gruffudd ap Meredith, in the beginning of the fourteenth Century, who compares the force of his own passion to that of Kynon for Morvyth, and that of Uther Pendragon for the fair Ygrayne.

"O gariad Eigr deg eirian
A chariad glwysferch Urien
Echwynawdd Bardd ar harddlun Uchenaid Uthyr a Chynon." Myv. Arch.

As the sigh of Uther for the love of Ygraine, the fair and splendid,
And the sigh of Kynon for the love of the beauteous daughter of Urien,
Such is the sigh of the bard for the lovely object of his affections.

In the Memorials of the Graves of the Warriors, the following stanza records the place of the sepulture of Kynon.

"Bet gur gwaud urtin
In uchel titin in isel gwelitin
Bet Cynon mab Clytno Idin."

The grave of a warrior of high renown
Is in a lofty region—but a lowly bed,
The grave of Kynon the son of Clydno Eiddin.

In another stanza, the term lowly bed seems to be explained, and it would appear that one of those little hollows among the mountains was alluded to;

"Piau y bet y dann y brinn
Bet gur gwrt yng Kiuiscin Bet Kinon mab Clytno Idin."

Whose is the grave beneath the hill?
It is the grave of a warrior valiant in the conflict—
The grave of Kynon the son of Clydno Eiddin.

Clydno Eiddin, the father of Cynon.—But little is known of the history of this Chieftain, although as late as the fourteenth Century, his name is found recorded by the Bards, in such terms as to make it evident that he still continued to occupy a place of considerable distinction among the heroes of the Principality, as may be seen in a poem by Risierdyn, a bard who flourished about the year 1300. In this poem, which records the burial of Hywel ap Gruffudd in the Church of St. Beuno, that Warrior is compared in point of bravery to Clydno.

"Rygud llew aryfrud llyw eurfro gwingost
Ynghongl gwyngor Beuno
Rwyf clotnerth ryvic Clytno
Rydewr greir rud derw a gro."

Myv. Arch. I. 432.

The red-weaponed chief, the ruler of the golden region of costly wine,
Saint Beuno's blessed choir now conceals;
The mighty high-famed leader, daring as Clydno.
Silent are his remains within their oaken cell.

Kai the son of Kyner.—Page 39.

Cai ap Cynyr.—According to the Welsh pedigrees, Kai was the son of Cynyr Cainvarvawc, the son of Gwron, the son of Cunedda Wledig. In the Triads he is called one of the three diadem'd chiefs of battle, and is said to have been possessed of magical powers, by which he could transform himself into any shape he pleased.* Of his real history, however, nothing is known. It is supposed that Caer Gai, in North Wales, bears his name; and it was the opinion of Iolo Morganwg, that the place of his sepulture was at Cai Hir, at Aberavan in Glamorganshire.

In the Brut, he is called the Dapifer, or Sewer of King Arthur. And in the French Romances he is mentioned as the Seneschal, and is styled Messire Queux, and Maitre Queux, or Keux; the original name being evidently altered in this manner, in order to adapt it to his office of Chief of the Cooks. In these productions, his general character is a compound of valour and buffoonery; always ready to fight, and generally getting the worst of the battle.

There is much that is very entertaining concerning him in the Morte d'Arthur; particularly a story of his want of courtesy to Sir Gareth, Gwalchmai's (Gawain's) brother, which led him into trouble.

"Whan Arthur held his round table moost plenour, it fortuned that he commaunded that the hyhe feest of Pentecost shold be holden at a cyte and a Castel the whiche in tho dayes was called kynke kenadonne upon the sondes that marched nyghe walys." Upon this occasion, a youth who would not declare his name, presented himself before Arthur, and craved a boon, which the monarch immediately promised to grant. The boon he asked was, that he should be allowed meat and drink for the space of a twelve month in the king's palace.

* Kai's horse, according to the Welsh authorities, was called Gwineu gwddwf hir, the long-necked bay.

This the King considered a very unworthy petition, and counselled him to ask something more honourable, but the youth still persisted in his request. "Wel sayd the kynge ye shal haue mete and drynke ynouz, I neuer deffended yt none, nother my frende ne my foo." "Thenne the kyng betook hym to sir Kay the steward and charged hym that he shold gyue hym of al manner of metes and drynkis of the best, and also that he hadde al maner of fyndynge as though he were a lordes sone. that shal lytel nede sayd syr Kay to doo suche cost upon hym. For I dare undertake he is a vylayne borne, and neuer will make man, for and he had come of gentylmen he wold haue axed of you hors and armour, but such as he is so he asketh. And sythen he hath no name, I shall yeue hym a name that shall be Beaumayns that is fayre handes, and in to the kechen I shalle brynge hym, and there he shalle haue fatte broweys euery day yt he shall be as fatte by the twelue monethes ende as a porke hog." So Sir Kai "scorned hym and mocked hym."*

At the end of the twelvemonth, Beaumayns desired to be knighted, in order to achieve a certain perilous adventure; and Sir Kai called him a "kechyn knave." And when the young man left the Court, to set out on his expedition, Kai armed himself, and followed him, thinking to vanquish him without difficulty, and bring him to disgrace. But Beaumayns unhorsed Sir Kai, and took possession of his arms, with which he performed several gallant exploits, to the great surprise of all, inasmuch as he was taken by his shield to be Sir Kai, whose prowess was by no means in high repute. Afterwards Beaumayns proved to be Sir Gareth of Orkney, the son of King Lot, and brother of Sir Gawain.

According to the Welsh Legends, Arthur had three Queens, one of whom was daughter of Gwythyr ap Greidiol, another of Gwryd Gwent, and a third of Gogyrvan Gawr; and each of them bore the name of Gwenhwyvar. Concerning the latter Lady,* the following couplet is still current in the Principality,

* It is somewhat singular that this adventure was undertaken on behalf of Luned, who, under the title of the damoysel sauuage, rode to Arthur's Court, to beseech the championship of some of the Knights of the Table rounde, for her sister dame Lyones, of the Castel perylous. The story is again referred to in a subsequent Note.

"Gwenhwyfar merch Gogyrfan Gawr Drwg yn fechan, gwaeth yn fawr."

Gwenhwyvar the daughter of Gogyrvan the Giant,
Bad when little, worse when great.

This confusion of names and persons is only what might be expected from the mass of traditionary matter that has accumulated among the Welsh. As the exploits of Arthur began to assume a fabulous character, it is evident that many of the more ancient legends of Britain became blended with those of the Round Table, and perhaps some of the mythological traditions of the Druidic age are to be found amongst them. This continual accession of fable tends to render still more obscure that which a redundancy of imagination had already sufficiently involved.

The name of Gwenhwyvar, under the various forms of Guenever, Genievre, and Geneura, must be familiar to all who are conversant with Chivalric lore. And it is to her adventures, and those of her true knight, Sir Lancelot, that Dante alludes, in the beautiful episode of Francisca da Rimini.

The absence of a Porter was formerly considered as an indication of hospitality, and as such is alluded to by Rhys Brychan, a bard who flourished at the close of the fifteenth century.

"I mae'r porth aruthr heb ddim porthorion, A'i dai'n egored i bob dyn gwirion."

The stately entrance is without porters,
And his mansions are open to every honest man.

* According to the Romances, Arthur's Queen was daughter of King Leodegrance.

Lewis Glyn Cothi also, (about 1450,) in an eulogium upon Owain the son of Gruffudd ap Nicholas, says, that his establishment was complete in every respect, with the exception of a Porter.

"Pob swyddog sy i'r marchog mawr Deau perthig, onid porthawr." I. 139.

Every Officer there is to the great Knight
Of the South, except a porter.

GLEWLWYD GAVAELVAWR.—PAGE 39.

"THE dusky hero of the mighty grasp," is said to have escaped from the battle of Camlan, by means of his extraordinary strength and stature. There is nothing of his real history known; and, indeed, from the construction of his name, he appears to be altogether a fictitious character; and it is not impossible that he may be one of those mythological personages who formed the subjects of the Welsh legendary tales, before the adventures of Arthur had assumed the character of fiction, and that when those adventures became objects of fabulous composition, this and other ancient Druidical traditions were incorporated with them.

Among the Bardic remains, there is a poem, called a dialogue betwixt Arthur, and Kai, and Glewlwyd.

"Pa gwr yw y Porthawr
Glewlwyd Gafaelfawr
Pa gwr ai govin
Arthur a chai gwin*
Pa imdda genhit
Gwin goreu im bid
Ym ty ny ddoi
Onis gwaredy," &c.

Davies considers these lines to have reference to some Druidical mysteries. Although it may appear presumptuous to differ from so high an authority, I shall venture to give the following translation,

* Here I apprehend there is a play on the word "gwin," as the words "Kai gwyn" signify the blessed Kai, but "Kai gwin" means Kai the purveyor of wine, in which office he figured at the Court of Britain.

Who is the Porter?
Glewlwyd Gavaelvawr.
Who is it that asks?
Arthur and the blessed Kai.
If thou shouldst bring with thee
The best wine in the world
Into my house, thou shalt not come,
Unless it be by force, &c.

On a seat of green rushes.—Page 40.

The use of green rushes in apartments was by no means peculiar to the Court of Caerleon upon Usk. Our ancestors had a great predilection for them, and they seem to have constituted an essential article, not only of comfort, but of luxury. The custom of strewing the floor with rushes is well known to have existed in England during the middle Ages, and that it also prevailed in the Principality, we have evidence from allusions which occur in the works of native writers. Of this, one example will suffice, from a tale written apparently in the 14th Century; and as the passage contains several curious traits of ancient manners, I shall give it at some length.

In this Tale, Davydd ap Owain Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, wishing to send an embassy to Rhys, Prince of South Wales; and having fixed upon Gwgan the Bard, as a proper person for that mission, despatches a messenger called y Paun Bach, in search of him. This person, after a long and tedious journey, arrives towards the close of evening at a house in a wooded valley, where he hears the tuning of a harp. From the style of playing, and the modulation, (y caniad a'r gweirad,) he supposes that the performer can be no other than Gwgan himself. In order to ascertain if his surmise is correct, he addresses him in a rambling high-flown style of language. The Bard answers him in the same strain, and asks him what he requires. To which Y Paun Bach thus replies:—"I want lodging for to-night. ..... And that not better than I know how to ask for. ..... A lightsome hall, floored with tile, and swept, in which there has been neither flood nor rain-drop for the last hundred years, dressed with fresh green rushes, laid so evenly, that one rush be not higher than the other the height of a gnat's eye, so that my foot should not slip either backward or forward the space of a mote in the sunshine of June. Then I would have a chair with a cushion beneath me, and a pillow under each elbow,"* &c. Y Paun Bach then goes on to describe the entertainment he desires to have. The fire is to be of ashen billets, without smoke or sparks; and the supper is to consist of wine, and swans,† and bitterns, and sundry spiced collops besides; and the servants all dressed in one livery,‡ are to ply him continually

* We trace the customs of a country in what may appear accidental expressions. Thus a cushion in a chair was one of the requisites of a Welsh establishment.

"Tri pheth gweddus i wr eu bod yn ei dy,

"Ei wraig yn ddiwair;
Ei glustog yn ei gadair;
A'i Delyn yn gywair."

Three things proper for a man to have in his house,

A virtuous wife;
His cushion in his chair;
And his Harp in Tune.

In like manner it is particularly mentioned in the present tale, that Arthur had "a cushion of red satin under his elbow," p. 40; and that at the Castle where Kynon was received, on his way to the adventure of the Fountain, the maidens, in doing him honour, "placed cushions both beneath and around him," when he sat down to meat, p. 43. In this latter instance, the cushions we find were covered with red linen.

† Swans appear to have been a great dainty in those days. Of the luxurious Monk in the Pilgrimage to Canterbury, Chaucer tells us, "A fat swan loved he best of any rost."—line 206.

‡ Uniformity of dress in those who held the same office, appears to be dwelt upon with much satisfaction by the writers of the Middle Ages. In Geoffrey of Monmouth, the thousand young noblemen, who, at Arthur's Coronation Banquet, assisted Kai in serving up the dishes, were clothed like him in Robes of Ermine. The same writer proceeds to tell us, that "at that Time Britain was arrived to such a pitch of Grandeur, that whether we respect its Affluence of Riches, Luxury of Ornaments, or Politeness of Inhabitants, it far surpassed all other Kingdoms." And he adds, "The Knights in it that were famous for Feats of Chivalry, wore their Clothes and Arms all of the same colour and Fashion. And the Women also no less celebrated for their Wit, wore all the same Kind of Apparel."—Thompson's Translation.

In the Procession to Canterbury, Chaucer relates, that "An Haberdasher, and a Carpenter,

A Webbe, a Dyter, and a Tapiser,
Were alle yclothed in o livere,
Of a solempne and grete fraternite." line 363.

with ale, and urge him to drink, for his own good, and the honour of his entertainers.

In France, the practice of strewing rushes on the floor was also prevalent. We find the Seigneur Amanieu des Escars giving his instructions to the young men of his household on the Art of Love, "dans Sa Salle bien jonchée." Poesies Provençales, cited by St. Palaye, I. 453.

Flame coloured satin.—Page 40.

The literal translation of this expression is yellow-red. With regard to this mixture of colours, Ellis, in his notes to Way's Fabliaux, remarks, "The old French writers speak also of pourpre and écarlate blanches, (white crimson;) of pourpre sanguine, (sanguine crimson;)" and, in the Fabliau de Gantier d'Arepais, mention is made of "un vert mantel porprine, (a mantle of green crimson.)" Hence, M. Le Grand conjectures, "that the crimson dye being, from its costliness, used only on cloths of the finest manufacture; the term crimson came at length to signify, not the colour, but the texture, of the stuff. Were it allowable to attribute to the Weavers of the Middle Ages the art now common amongst us, of making what are usually called shot silks, (or silks of two colours, predominating interchangeably as in the neck of the drake or pigeon,) the contradictory compounds above given (white crimson, green crimson, &c.) would be easily accounted for." II. 227.

A cushion of red satin was under his elbow.—Page 40.

Distant regions.—Page 41.

Literally, "desert places, and the extremities of the earth." It is possible that some peculiar district of romantic geography was intended to be here alluded to, since we find that "la terre deserte" was formerly a kingdom of no inconsiderable importance, the sovereign of which named Claudas, overran the territories of King Ban of Benoic, one of Arthur's allies in Gaul. And in the Morte d'Arthur, it is said that Arthur being wounded in the battle of Camlan, was conveyed to the Island of Avalon, "in a shyppe wherin were thre quenes, that one was kyng Arthurs syster quene Morgan le fay, the other was the quene of North galys, the thyrd was the quene of the waste londes. Also there was Nynyue (Viviane) the chyef lady of the lake," &c.

Trees of equal growth.—Page 41.

This species of scenery appears to have been much admired by our ancestors.

A similar description occurs in a chivalric Tale of considerable interest, by Gruffydd ab Adda, a Bard who was killed at Dolgellau, about 1370.

"Ymhen eithaf y goedwig hon ev à ddarganvu ddyffryn gwastadwyrdd, a choed gogyvuwch," &c.

In the furthermost end of this forest he saw a level green valley, and trees of equal height, &c.

Chaucer describes a bower in the same style, in his Flour and Life. It was composed of "sicamour and eglatere."

> "Wrethen in fere so well and cunningly
> That every branch and leafe grew by mesure > Plaine as a bord, of an height by and by."

The whole account which he gives us of the "pleasaunt herber," is very poetical, particularly the following beautiful lines, descriptive of the avenues of "okes" which led to it.

> "In which were okes great, streight as a line
> Under the which the grasse so fresh of hew
> Was newly sprong, and an eight foot or nine
> Every tree well fro his fellow grew,
> With branches brode, laden with leves new,
> That sprongen out agen the sunne-shene
> Some very red, and some a glad light grene."

Yellow Satin.—Page 41.

Pali melyn.—The exact signification of the word Pali is not quite obvious, as it sometimes seems to imply satin, and sometimes velvet, according to the rank of the persons who are represented as wearing it. Nor is the question so immaterial as at first sight it may appear; for in the best days of Chivalry, the most exact etiquette was observed by the different grades of society, with regard to the materials of which their dress was composed. St. Palaye mentions, that on occasions where the Knights wore cloth of damask, the Squires were restricted to dresses of satin; and where the Knights were clothed in velvet, the Squires could only appear in cloth of damask. The colour of scarlet was permitted to be worn only by Knights. I. 247. 283.

Sinews of the Stag.—Page 42.

Moseley, in his work upon Archery, says, that "bowstrings were composed from the sinews of beasts; and on that account are termed 'Nervus,' νεῦρα." "It was customary, for this purpose," says he, "to select the sinews of several of those kinds of animals remarkable for their strength, or activity; such as Bulls, Lions, Stags, &c. and from those particular parts of each animal, in which their respective strength was conceived to lie. From Bulls, the sinews about the back and shoulders were collected; and from Stags, they took those of the legs."

Bone of the Whale.—Page 42.

A similar substance is mentioned in the ancient Romance of "The Erle of Tolous," "Hur hondys whyte as whallys bonne," verse 355.

Upon which Ritson has the following note:—"This allusion is not to what we now call whale-bone, which is wel known to be black, but to the ivory of the horn or tooth of the Narwhal, or Sea-unicorn, which seems to have been mistakeën for the whale. The similé is a remarkable favourite. Thus, in Syr Eglamour of Artoys,

"The erle had no chylde but one,
A mayden as white as whalës bone."

Again, in Syr Isembras,

"His wyfe as white as whalës bone."

Again, in "The Squyr of low degree,"

"Lady as white as whalës bone."

It even occurs in Skeltons, and Suneys Poems; and, what is still more extraordinary, in Spenser's Faërie Quene, and Shakspeare's Loves-labours-lost, (if, in fact, that part of it ever received the illuminating touch of our great dramatist.) Mister Steevens, in his Note on the last instance, observes that whales 'is the Saxon genitive case,' meaning that it requires to be pronounced as a dissyllable, (thus, whalës, or, more properly, whalës,) which, it certainly is, in every instance." Rit. Met. Rom. III. 343-4.

Winged with Peacock's Feathers.—Page 42.

That it was fashionable to feather arrows in this manner, we learn from the following description of the Yeman who attended upon the Knight, in the Prologue to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

"A shefe of peacock arwes bright and kene
Under his belt he bare ful thriftily,
Wel coude he dresse his takel yemanly:
His arwes drouped not with fetheres low
And in his hond he bare a mighty bowe."—line 104. 8.

In a Wardrobe account, 4th of Ed. II. the following entry occurs, "Pro duodecim flecchiis cum pennis de pavone emptis pro rege, de 12 den'." For twelve arrows with peacock's feathers, bought for the King, twelvepence.

There was much art and care required in the construction and feathering of arrows. That the Welsh archers paid much attention to their equipments, may be seen in an interesting passage, from the composition already noticed, p. 101. In this Tale, the messenger from the Court of North Wales, who appears to be a skilful archer, on being told by Gwgan the Bard, that a robber will ride away with his horse, answers, "But what if I were opposite to him in yonder Wood, with a bow of red yew in my hand, ready bent, with a tough tight string, and a straight round shaft, with a compass-rounded nock, and long slender feathers fastened on with green silk, and a steel head, heavy and thick, and an inch across, of a green blue temper, that would draw blood out of a weathercock; and with my foot to a hillock, and an oak behind me, and the wind to my back, and the sun to my side, and the maid I love best on the footpath hard by, looking at me, and I conscious of her being there; then would I shoot him such a shot, so strong and long-drawn, so low and sharp, that it would be no more avail to him, there were between him and me a breastplate and Milan hauberk, than a tuft of fern, or a kiln mat, or a herring net."

It is well known that bows and arrows formed a subject of legislation in England; and among the Welsh Laws, we find the following clause:—

"Tri arv cyfraith y sydd: cleddyv, gwayw, a bwa a deudeg saeth yn nghawell; ac ar bob gwr teulu eu cadw yn barawdgyrch, rhag llu gorwlad ac estron, ac ereill o wyr anrhaith."

Three weapons by law: A sword, a spear, and a bow with twelve arrows in a quiver. And it is required of every master of a family to keep them in readiness against the attacks of a foreign army, and of strangers, and other depredators.

Golden heads.—Blades of Gold.—Page 42.

To Knights and to their families was exclusively confined the privilege of decorating their dress, their arms, and the accoutrements of their horses with gold; Squires being only permitted the use of silver. St. Palaye, I. 247, 283. By the sumptuary laws of Ed. III. (an. 27. c. ix. x. xi. xii.) Esquires were to possess property of at least 200 marks yearly value, before they could be permitted to wear

"cloth of silk and of silver, ribband, girdle, and other apparel reasonably garnished with silver." And Knights, their wives, daughters, and children, were not entitled to wear "cloth of gold, nor cloths, mantle, nor gold furred with miniver, nor of ermins, nor no apparel bordered of stone, nor otherwise," if their possessions were below the yearly value of 251 marks. But to such Knights and Ladies as possessed 400 marks annually, there was no restriction as to dress, except with respect to "ermins and letuses and apparel of pearl and stone," which they might only wear upon the head. Merchants and burgesses of 500 marks had the same privilege of dress as Esquires of 200 markland. Hence perhaps it may be inferred that the two Youths mentioned in this Tale were of knightly origin.

That the gilding of bows was customary in the 14th Century, we have the authority of Davydd ap Gwilym. In a poem to his fair countrywomen against gaudiness of dress, "Ar waith merched yn ymbincio," he says,

"Y bwa ŷw, ni bo iach,
A der dau hanner hayach;
Ag aur y lliwir ei gefn:
Bydd hwn yn ddidwn ddodrefn;
Ac er mawr-werth y gwerthir
Y bwa hwn, gwn mae gwir."—p. 412.

Which lines have been thus elegantly rendered, by Arthur Johnes, Esq. in his Poetical Translation of the Works of this celebrated Bard.

"The vilest bow that e'er was framed of Yew,
That in the hand abruptly snaps in two,
When all its faults are varnished o'er with gold,
Looks strong, and fair, and faultless, and—is sold."

Lewis Glyn Cothi has the following line,

"Eurer dy fysedd ath gledd ath glôg."

With gold shall be adorned thy fingers, thy sword, and thy mantle.

And examples might be multiplied to almost any extent.

Where arrow heads, and the blades of weapons are mentioned as golden, it is very evident that in many instances steel inlaid with gold is meant. Thus, the Bard above alluded to, says,

"Brigawndr aur fal bwrw gwn draig."

A gold Brigandine like the casting of a Dragon's skin.

And subsequently this gold Brigandine is said to be of steel.

"Da yw rhwym y bais dur hon."

Good is the band of this steel vestment.—I. 158.

Shooting their Daggers.—Page 42.

In the original, the words are, "a chylleill a llafneu eur udunt. Ac eu karneu o asgwrn moruil yn nodeu udunt. Ac wynteu yn saethu eu kylleill." The true interpretation of this passage depends upon the meaning of the word nodeu, the d and dd being frequently used one for the other in the Llyfr Coch Manuscript. If it was intended to be read no*dd*eu, it would apply to the hilts of the daggers, as that word means protections. But on the other hand, should no*d*eu, marks, have been intended, the signification will be that the Youths set up their daggers as marks to shoot at.

Variegated Leather.—Page 42.

Cordwal.—This word occurs in another of the Mabinogion; and from the manner that it is used, it is evidently intended for the French Cordouan, or Cordovan leather, which derived its name from Cordova, where it was manufactured.

More lovely than Gwenhwyvar.—Page 42.

This was the highest compliment that Kynon could pay to the beauty of these four and twenty damsels, since Gwenhwyvar is celebrated in the Triads, (with Enid and Tegau Euron,) as one of the three fair ladies of Arthur's Court.

Lewis Glyn Cothi, in extolling the charms of Annes, the daughter of John, of Caerleon upon Usk, has the following allusion to this Triad:—

"Mae Annes haeldeg lle'r oedd Degau,
Lle'r oedd Gwenhwyvar, a'i holl raddau;
Lle gwelid Enid ynau o asur,
Lle mae mur Arthur mawr ei wyrthiau."

The beauteous and amiable Annes is where Tegau was,
Where Gwenhwyvar was, with all her charms;
Where Enid was seen, wearing azure robes,
Where the Castle of the valorous Arthur stands.

They rose up at my coming.—Page 43.

It was very usual in those chivalric days, for the ladies to perform those courteous offices for the Knights, even where there were male attendants, to whom we may consider that they would have been more appropriately assigned. St. Palaye tells us, Les jeunes demoiselles, "prévenoient de civilité les chevaliers qui arrivoient dans les châteaux; suivant nos romanciers, elles les desarmoient au retour des tournois et des expeditions de guerre, leur donuoient de nouseaux habits et les servoient à table. Les exemples en sout trop souvent et trop uniformément répétés, pour nous permettre de révoquer en doubte lu réalité de cet usage." I. 10. I should imagine, however, it was the absence of male assistance that induced the damsels in Kynon's story to extend their cares to his horse, for I am not aware that in general their courtesy went so far.

Gold band upon the Mantle.—Page 43.

The word in the original Welsh is gorffoys, which is evidently the same as orfrays, or aurifrigia.* This was a kind of fretwork, or embroidery of gold, and is mentioned thus in the playful description of the allegorical figure of Idlenesse, which occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose.

BUFFALO HORN.—PAGE 43.

DRINKING HORNS of this material are frequently mentioned by the Bards, and appear to have been made use of by the Welsh in all their banquets. There is still extant in the Welsh language, a spirited poem by Owain Kyveiliog, Prince of Powis, called the Hirlas, a name by which his drinking horn was known, and which he describes as

"Hirlas buelin breint uchel hen ariant."

The highly honoured buffalo-horn Hirlas, enriched with ancient silver.

In the course of this poem, one passage occurs, of a highly dramatic character. The Prince having sent round the horn to several chieftains, at length orders it to be filled with the choicest beverage, and borne to Tudur and Moreiddig, at the same time expatiating with gratitude and admiration upon their valour, and the eminent services they had rendered him in the arduous conflicts in which he had been engaged. Turning round in the fulness of his heart, to address them personally, he perceives their places vacant; and suddenly recollecting that they had both fallen in one of the late encounters, he bursts out in a pathetic strain of lamentation, "The wail of death has been heard, they both have departed!—O, lost Moreiddig, how greatly shall I miss thee!"

Fountain.—Page 47.

This description answers to that of the Fountain of Barenton, in the forest of Breceliande, to which locality it is referred in the "Chevalier au Lion."* Breceliande is in Brittany, and is the fabled scene of Merlin's imprisonment, by the enchantments of his Mistress Viviane, the Lady of the Lake. Within the precincts of this Forest also lay the Val sans Retour, or the Vallon des Faux Amans.

The English poem tells us of a Chapel that was hard by the Fountain, and says,

> "An amerawd was the stane,
> Richer saw i never nane,
> On fowr rubyes on heght standand,
> Thair light lasted over al the land."—line 364.

An adventure so much to his own discredit.—Page 50.

By the laws of Chivalry, the knights were under a solemn obligation, when relating their adventures, to give a faithful account of what befell them, without concealing any thing, however disadvantageous to themselves.

Uncourteous speech.—Page 51.

Sir Kai's uncourteous speech was proverbial. In Ywain and Gawin, we are told,

> "And than als smertly sayd Sir Kay;
> He karpet to tham wordes grete."

And so rude was his manner, that at length

> "The quene answered, with milde mode,
> And said, Sir Kay, etton wode?

* A fountain possessed of the like properties occurs in the Fabliau of "The Paradise of Love," and a similar one is mentioned in "The noble hystory of Kyng Ponthus of Galyce."

Horn for Washing.—Page 51.

It was customary to prepare for dinner by washing the hands, and the summons for this preparation was given by sounding a horn, which, by the French, was termed corner l'eau, or corner l'eve. Amongst the Monks, the same notice was given by ringing a bell.

Black Knight.—Page 54.

We have the name of the Black Knight given us both in the English and in the French version. In the former, the appellation of Salados the rouse is bestowed upon him, and in the latter he is called Elcadoc le rous, which bears some resemblance to the Welsh Cadoc or Cattwg.

Maiden.—Page 54.

This maiden, whose name we subsequently find to be Luned, is supposed, in the Notes to Jones's Welsh Bards, to be the same person as Elined the daughter of Brychan; although from the accounts transmitted to us of that illustrious lady, she appears to have differed much in disposition and pursuits from the hand-maid of the Lady of the Fountain. Mr. Rees, in his valuable Essay on the Welsh Saints, has the following notice concerning her:—

"Elined, the Almedha of Giraldus Cambrensis, who says that she suffered martyrdom upon a hill called Penginger, near Brecknock, which the Historian of that County so often quoted, identifies with Slwch.

'Crug gorseddawl,'* mentioned after the name of Elined in the Myvyrian Archaiology, has been taken for Wyddgrug, or Mold, in * Crug gorseddawl, 'the hill of Judicature.'—Dr. Pughe's Welsh Dictionary.—(The words of the Myvyrian Archaiology are "Elined verch Vrychan yngorsebawl, neu Crug gorseddawl. T. W. 2."—II. 41.

Flintshire; but it may be no more than a descriptive appellation of Slwch, on which there were lately some remains of a British Camp. Cressy, speaking of St. Almedha, says, 'This devout virgin, rejecting the proposals of an earthly prince, who sought her in marriage, and espousing herself to the eternal king, consummated her life by a triumphant martyrdom. The day of her solemnity is celebrated every year on the first day of August.'" 149—50.

The beauty of Luned was much celebrated among the Bards of the Middle Ages. Gruffudd ap Meredydd, who flourished between 1290 and 1340, thus alludes to her charms, in an Elegy on Gwenhwyvar of Anglesey,

"Och o'r golled am ail Luned em oleuni."

Alas for the loss of her who was equal to Luned, that gem of light.

And Dafydd ap Gwilym mentions her in the same strain.

She is in the French Romances generally called Lunette, and in the Morte d'Arthur, she acts a conspicuous part in the story of Sir Gareth of Orkney, who undertook the adventure of the "Castel perylous" on her behalf, and whose illtreatment by Sir Kai is related, p. 97. Sir Gareth took his full revenge upon Sir Kai, but his conduct under the taunts he received from Luned, who called him a kechen knaue, and used towards him very discourteous language, considering that he was taking up her quarrel, is generous and high-minded in the extreme. It ended in Sir Gareth marrying Luned's sister, Dame Lyones of the Castel perylous; and in Luned herself, who is also called the "damoysel saueage," becoming the wife of Sir Gaherys, who was Sir Gareth's brother. And these nuptials were solemnized with great pomp and splendour at King Arthur's Court. See Morte d'Arthur, Book VII.

Whatever is in my power.—Page 55.

It appears rather extraordinary at first sight, that Luned should take so lively an interest in Owain, and give herself so much trouble to forward his suit with the Countess; and also that she should express herself so well acquainted with his character. But from the English Metrical Romance, we find that the were old friends, Luned having been on an embassy to Arthur's Court some time previous.

Digitized by Google

Take this Ring.—Page 55.

The ring is enumerated among the "Thirteen Rarities of Kingly Regalia, of the Island of Britain; which were formerly kept at Caerlleon, on the river Usk, in Monmouthshire. These curiosities went with Myrddin the son of Morvran, into the house of Glass, in Enlli, or Bardsey Island. It has also been recorded by others, that it was Taliesin, the Chief of the Bards, who possessed them."

12. "Maen Modrwy Eluned; a dynnodd Owain ab Urien..... rhwng yr ôg a'r mûr: pwy bynnag a guddiai y maen, fe ai cuddiai y maen ynteu."

The Stone of the Ring of Luned; which liberated Owen the son of Urien, from between the portcullis and the wall. Whoever concealed that stone, the stone or bezil, would conceal him.

The properties of this magical ring, will, doubtless, call to mind the ring of Gyges, which was most probably the prototype from which it was indirectly derived.

Horseblock.—Page 55.

Ellis, in his Notes to Way's Fabliaux, has the following remarks upon horseblocks, which are mentioned in a vast number of the old Romances, "They were frequently placed on the roads, and in the forests, and were almost numberless in the towns. Many of them still remain in Paris, where they were used by the magistrates in order to mount their mules, on which they rode to the courts of justice. On these blocks, or on the tree which was generally planted near them, were usually suspended the shields of those Knights who wished to challenge all comers to feats of arms. They were also sometimes used as a place of judgment, and a rostrum, on which the barons took their seats when they determined the differences between their vassals, and from whence the publick criers made proclamations to the people." II. 229.

Painted with gorgeous colours.—Page 56.

This custom of painting figures upon the pannels of rooms, was much practised and esteemed at the time when we may suppose that this Tale was put into its present dress. Chaucer has several instances, of which we may notice more particularly the allegorical figures on the wall, at the opening of the Romaunt of the Rose, and the far more interesting and descriptive representations in the Temples of Mars, Venus, and Diana, in the "Knightes Tale." The paintings at the Temple of Mars were executed with so much art, that even sounds were emitted by them.

"First on the wall was peinted aforest
In which ther wonneth neyther man ne best
With knotty knarvy barrein trees old
Of stubbes sharpe and hidous to behold
In which ther ran a romble and a swough,
As though a storme shuld bresten every bough," &c.—1977.

Sendall.—Page 57.

This word is the same as that in the original Welsh, and is used by the old writers to signify a thin kind of silk, like cypress. The dress of the "Doctour of Phisike," one of the pilgrims to Canterbury, was, no doubt, a handsome one, and of him we are told,

In sanguine and in perse he clad was alle
Lined with taffata, and with sendalle.—441.

She washed Owain's head.—Page 59.

However, these personal services may appear to be at variance with the manners of the present day, it is clear that they are in perfect accordance with those of our ancestors. Of this, the following passage from the Life of Merlin, will afford an example,—

Digitized by Google

"When they went to the palace and had disarmed themselves, King Leodagan made his daughter Genievre (Gwenhwyvar) take the richest cloths which were in the house, and warm water, and fair basons of silver, and made them be placed before King Arthur, and King Ban, and King Boors; and his daughter would wait upon Arthur, and would wash his neck and his face; but he would not allow thereof, till Leodagan and Merlin requested him, and made him accept the lady's service. The damsel washed his face right humbly, and then she wiped it with a fine towel, full gently; and then she went and ministered in like manner to the other twain."

Countess.—Page 60.

The English Version gives this Countess the title of > "The riche lady Alundyne,

> The dukes doghter of Landuit."—line 1255.

And it is very satisfactory to find that she was not that Penarwen, daughter of Culfynawyt Prydein, who is mentioned as Owain's wife in the Triads, though in terms which are anything but complimentary. Perhaps Penarwen may have been a subsequent wife, since we may infer that Owain survived the Lady of the Fountain, from the circumstance so naively mentioned in the text, of her continuing to be his wife as long as she lived.

In Owen's Llywarch Hên, it is stated that after the death of Penarwen, Owain was married to Denyw, the daughter of Llewddyn Luyddawg of Edinburgh, by whom he had Kendeyrn Garthwys, the celebrated St. Kentigern, who founded the Cathedral at Glasgow.

Her nuptials with Owain.—Page 63.

This trait of manners is very characteristic of the times in which the present Tale was written. It was very usual for widows and heiresses in the troublous days of Knight errantry to marry those whose strength and valour rendered them best able to defend and preserve to them their possessions. St. Palaye, in enumerating the advantages of the order of Knighthood, does not forget to mention this easy mode of advancing to fortune. I. 267, 326.

GWALCHMAI AP GWYAR.—This ancient British name, Gwalchmai, which signifies the Hawk of Battle; is in the French Romances changed into the very dissimilar form of Gawain, having first been Latinized into Walganus and Walweyn. In the Triads, he is mentioned in the following manner:—

"Tri marchawg aurdafodiawg oedd yn Llys Arthur: nid amgen, Gwalchmai ab Gwyar; Drudwas ab Tryffin; ac Eliwlod ab Madog ab Uthur: Canys nid oedd na Brenin, na Iarll, nag Arglwydd ag i delai yr rhain attynt nas gwrandewynt arnynt o flaen ereill; a pha neges bynnac a geisent hwy, yntwy ai mynnynt, naill ai o fodd, ai o anfodd; am hynny i gelwyd nhw yn aur-dafodiawg."

There were three golden tongued Knights in the Court of Arthur; Gwalchmai the son of Gwyar; Drudwas the son of Tryffin and Eliwlod the son of Madog ap Uthur. For there was neither King, nor Earl, nor Lord, to whom these came, but would listen to them before all others; and whatever request they made, it would be granted them, whether willingly or unwillingly; and thence were they called the Golden Tongued.

As a proof of the high estimation in which Gwalchmai's powers persuasion were held, the following extract from the Myvyrian Archaiology may be adduced.

"LLYMA ENGLYNION

A fu rhwng Trystan fab Tallwch a Gwalchmai fab Gwyar," &c.

GWALCHMAI.

"Prwystl sydd ton anianawl

HERE ARE ENGLYNS

Between Trystan the son of Tallwch, and Gwalchmai the son of Gwyar, after Trystan had been absent three years from Arthur's Court, in displeasure, and Arthur had sent eight and twenty warriors to seize him, and bring him to Arthur, and Trystan smote them all down, one after another, and came not for any one, but for Gwalchmai with the Golden Tongue.

GWALCHMAI.

Tumultuous is the nature of the wave,
When the sea is at its height.—
Who art thou, mysterious warrior?

TRYSTAN.

Tumultuous are the waves and the thunder.
In their bursting forth let them be tumultuous.
In the day of conflict I am Trystan.

GWALCHMAI.

Trystan of the faultless speech,
Who, in the day of battle, would not retreat,
A companion of thine was Gwalchmai.

TRYSTAN.

I would do for Gwalchmai in that day,
In the which the work of slaughter is let loose,
That which one brother would not do for another.

GWALCHMAI.

Trystan, endowed with brilliant qualities,
Whose spear has oft been shivered in the toil of war,
I am Gwalchmai the nephew of Arthur.

TRYSTAN.

Gwalchmai, there swifter than Mydrin,
Shouldst thou be in danger,
I would cause blood to flow till it reached the knees.

GWALCHMAI.

Trystan, for thy sake would I strive
Untill my wrist should fail me;
Also for thee I would do my utmost.

TRYSTAN.

I ask it in defiance,
I ask it not through fear,—
Who are the warriors before me?

GWALCHMAI.

Trystan, of distinguished qualities,
Are they not known to thee?
It is the household of Arthur that comes.

TRYSTAN.

Arthur will I not shun,
To nine hundred combats will I dare him.—
If I am slain, I will also slay.

GWALCHMAI.

Tristan, the friend of damsels,
Before commencing the work of strife,
The best of all things is peace.

TRYSTAN.

Let me but have my sword upon my thigh,
And my right hand to defend me,
And I myself will be more formidable than they all.

GWALCHMAI.

Trystan of brilliant qualities,
Before exciting the tumult of conflict,—
Reject not Arthur as a friend.

TRYSTAN.

Gwalchmai, for thy sake will I deliberate,
And with my mouth I utter it.—
As I am loved, so will I love.

GWALCHMAI.

Trystan of aspiring mind,
The shower wets a hundred oaks.
Come to an interview with thy kinsman.

TRYSTAN.

Gwalchmai of persuasive answers,
The shower wets a hundred furrows.
I will go where'er thou wilt.

Then came Trystan with Gwalchmai to Arthur.

GWALCHMAI.

Arthur, of courteous replies,
The shower wets an hundred heads.
Here is Trystan, be thou joyful.

ARTHUR.

Gwalchmai, of faultless answers,
The shower wets a hundred dwellings.
A welcome to Trystan, my nephew.

Worthy Trystan, chief of the host,
Love thy race, remember the past;
Am I not the chief of the Tribe?

Trystan, leader of onsets,
Take equal with the best,
But leave the sovereignty to me.

Trystan wise and mighty chieftain,
Love thy kindred, none shall harm thee,
Let there be no coldness between friend and friend.

TRYSTAN.

Arthur, to thee will I attend,
To thy command will I submit,
And that thou wishest will I do.

In one Triad, we find Gwalchmai extolled as one of the three most courteous men towards guests and strangers, "tri dyn goreu wrth osp a phellenigion." And from another, we learn that he added scientific attainments to his other remarkable qualities.

"Tri Deifnogion ynys Prydain: Gwalchmai ab Gwyar; a Llecheu ab Arthur; a Rhiwallawn Wallt Banhadlen: ac nid oedd nas gwypyn ei ddefnydd a'i ddeifnogaeth, ai o ryw ai o rann, ai o ansawdd, ai o gyfansawdd, ai o ddychymmod, ai o ddychymmyg, ai o anian ai o aniad y byddei."

The three learned ones of the Island of Britain, Gwalchmai ab Gwyar, and Llecheu ab Arthur, and Rhiwallon with the broom-bush hair; and there was nothing of which they did not know the elements and the material essence.

William of Malmsbury says, that during the reign of William the Conqueror, (A. D. 1086,) the tomb of Gwalchmai, or Walwen, as he calls him, was discovered on the sea shore, in a certain province of Wales, called Rhôs, which is understood to be that still known by the same name, in the County of Pembroke, where there is a district called in Welsh Castell Gwalchmai, and in English Walwyn's Castle.

In the graves of the Warriors, a similar locality is indicated,

"Bet gualchmai ym pyton
Ir dilif y dyneuton."

The grave of Gwalchmai is in Pyton,
Where the ninth wave flows.

The Romances make Gawain one of the four sons of King Lot of Orkney, and of Morgawse, sister to King Arthur; and in them the character for courtesy given to him in the Triads is fully maintained. So proverbial, indeed, was he for this quality, that the highest praise the Squier could bestow upon the address of the knight who rode the "stede of bras," was,

"That Gawain with his olde curtesie,
Though he were come agen out of faerie,
Ne coude him not amenden with a word.—line 10410.

Satin robe of honour.—Page 67.

Cwnsallt o Bali.—This species of honourable dress could only be worn by knights; and, according to St. Palaye, was generally the gift of the sovereign who accompanied it with a palfrey, or, at least, with a horse's bit, either golden or gilded. His words are, "Le manteau long et traînant qui enveloppoit toute la personne, étoit reservé particulierement au chevalier, come la plus auguste et la plus noble décoration qu'il pût avoir lorsqu'il n'étoit point paré de ses armes ..... on l'appeloit le manteau d'honneur."—I. 287.

Earl of Rhangyw.—Page 67.

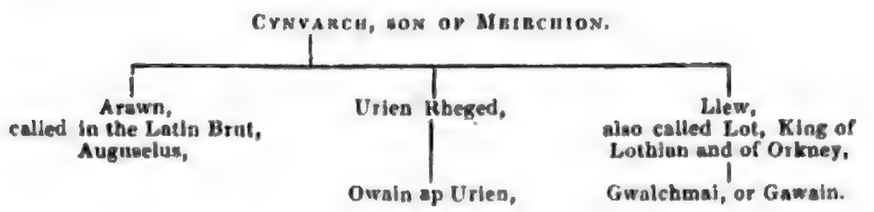
Probably this is meant for the Earl of Anjou, and was originally written Iarll yr Angyw, the Welsh particle yr, in its contracted form 'r, being by some error of the transcriber, incorporated with Angyw, which is the Welsh name for Anjou. What renders this the more likely is, that the Earldom of Anjou, or Angyw, was, according to the Brut, one of the possessions of Arthur, who bestowed it upon his seneschal Sir Kai.

Strong Lances.—Page 68.

It would be vain to attempt to find English terms corresponding precisely with those used in the Welsh text, to designate the various kinds of arms which the knights fought with, in this Tale.

Cousin.—Page 68.

The following genealogical table will explain this consanguinity, as given in the Welsh Pedigrees.



Digitized by Google

From very remote periods down to the time of Elizabeth, the Welsh kept up their Pedigrees with much care, and many copies of them are extant both in public and private collections; although in these, occasional discrepances may be perceived; yet, in general, their authenticity is well established. It must be allowed, that it appears somewhat extraordinary, that these family records should be transmitted with such accuracy, through so many generations. But when we consider the imperative obligations of the Welsh Laws upon this subject, we are no longer surprised at the existence of such ancient documents, nor at the solicitude of the Welsh to preserve them.

"It has been observed," says the Essayist on Welsh Pedigrees, in the Transactions of the Cymmrodorion Society, "that genealogies were preserved as a matter of necessity, under the ancient British constitution. A man's pedigree was to him of the first importance, as thereby he was enabled to ascertain and prove his birth-right, and claim the privileges which the law attached to it. Every one was obliged to shew his descent through nine generations, in order to be acknowledged a free native, by which right he claimed his portion of land in the community. He was also affected with respect to legal process in his collateral affinities through nine degrees, ("i'r nawved ach,") for instance, every murder committed, had a fine levied on the relations of the murderer, divided into nine degrees; his brother paying the greatest, and the ninth in relationship the least. The fine thus levied was in the same proportions distributed among the relations of the victim. A person beyond the ninth descent formed a new family; every family was represented by its elder, and these elders from every family were delegates to the national council."

Give me your swords.—Page 69.

This modesty, in disclaiming praise, and attaching merit to others, was one of the most esteemed qualities of knighthood. St. Palaye quotes from Olivier de la Marche, (Mem. i. 315,) a contest of generosity somewhat similar to that between Owain and Gwalchmai. "Jacques de Lalain et Piétois, en 1450, ayant fait armes à pied, se renverserent lun sur l'autre; ils furent relevés par les escortes et amenés aux juges qui les firent toucher ensemble en Signe de paix.

Comme Lalain, par Modestie, voulut envoyer son bracelet, suivant la convention faite pour le prix, Pietois déclara qu'ayant ete aussi bien que lui porte par terre, il se croiroit egalement oblige de lui donner le sien. Ce nouveau Combat de politesse finit par ne plus parler de bracelet, et par former une etroite liaison d'amitie entre ces genereux ennemis." I. 150.

Banquet.—Page 69.

A feast which took three years to prepare, and three months to consume, appears in our degenerate days as something quite enormous; but it is a trifle to what we read in another of the Mabinogion, where a party spend eighty years in listening to the songs of the birds of Rhianon, that charm away the remembrance of their sorrows.

A Damsel entered, upon a bay horse.—Page 70.

The custom of riding into a hall, while the Lord and his guests sat at meat, the memory of which is still preserved in the coronation ceremonials of this country, might be illustrated by innumerable passages of ancient Romance and History. But I shall content myself with a quotation from Chaucer's beautiful and half-told Tale of Cambuscan.

"And so befell that after the thridde cours
While that this king sit thus in his nobley,
Herking his ministralles hir thinges pley
Beforne him at his bord deliciously,
In at the halle dore al sodenly
Ther came a knight upon a stede of bras,
And in his hond a brod mirrour of glas;
Upon his thombe he had of gold a ring,
And by his side a naked swerd hanging:
And up he rideth to the highe bord.
In all the halle ne was ther spoke a word,
For mervaille of this knight; him to behold
Ful besily they waiten yong and old."—10,390, 10,401.

And anoint him with this Balsam.—Page 71.

The healing art was always confined to females in chivalric times, a principal part of whose education it formed, and to the wives and daughters of knights was confided the care of such as were sick or wounded. Of this, the instances are so numerous, that it is needless to adduce any here.

We find, from the English metrical version of this Tale, that the ointment here mentioned, was the gift of Morgant le sage, very probably the same as Morgan le fay, who was sister of King Arthur, and wife to Urien Rheged, and whose skill in magic was justly celebrated, as the adventure of the Manteau mal taille will unfortunately prove.

Wrested from her by a young Earl.—Page 72.

The name of this invader is in Ywain and Gawin, "The ryche eryl, syr Alers,"—line 1871 ; and the "Cuens Alers," in the Chevalier au Lion.

A beautiful black Steed.—Page 74.

The name of Owain's horse is recorded, with the epithet of "irrestrainable," (Anrheithfarch,) but we cannot venture to affirm that the Carn Aflawg (or grasping hoofed) of the Triads, was either the charger which he received from the Lady of the Castle, or that which met with so disastrous a fate at the falling of the portcullis.

Went on his way, as before.—Page 75.

The story of this adventure, as well as that of the fountain, appears to have been popular in the Principality, during the Middle Ages, as it is alluded to in an Ode addressed to Owain Glendower, by Gruffydd Llwyd ab Davydd ab Einion, one of his Bards, about the year 1400.

"Llywiaist siwrneaist helynt,
Owain ab Urien gain gynt

Pan oedd vuan ymwanwr,
Y marchog diviog o'r dwr:
Duroleoedd wrth ymdaraw
A phen draig ar ei ffon draw;
Gwyr vuant er llwyddiant llu,
Gwrdd ddewrnerth gwewyr ddarnu."

Of this, the following translation is given in Jones's Welsh Bards, I. 41.

"On sea, on land, thou still didst brave
The dangerous cliff, and rapid wave;
Like Owain, who subdu'd the knight,
And the fell dragon put to flight,
Yon moss-grown fount, beside;
The grim, black warrior of the flood,
The dragon, gorg'd with human blood
The water's scaly pride."

Stone Vault.—Page 77.

This part of the Tale is by no means clearly expressed, but it is evidently intended to be understood that Luned was incarcerated in a stone cell, near which Owain chanced to halt for the night. We subsequently find that he shut up the Lion in the same place, during his contest with Luned's persecutors.

A Monster.—Page 79.

This monster is in the English called "Harpyns of Mowntain," and he is, moreover, said to have been "a devil of mekil pryde." According to this and the French version, the good knight (who, it appears, had married a sister of Sir Gawain) was, originally, the father of "sex knyghts," two of whom Harpyns had already slain, while he threatened to put the remaining four to death, unless their sister was given "hym to wyve." The costume of the Harpyns and the four young men is very characteristic.

And bar a lever of yren ful strang,
Tharwith he bet them bitterly,
Grete rewth it was to her tham cry,
Thai had no thing tham for to hyde.
A dwergh yode on the tother syde;
He bar a scowrge with cordes ten,
Thar-with he bet tha gentil men."

And further on, it is said of the giant,

"Al the armure he was yn
Was noght bot of a bul-skyn."

State of Stupor.—Page 82.

The literal meaning of this passage is not advantageous to the four and twenty ladies, as it gives them a character for any thing but sobriety. It is possible, however, that allusion is made to some act of necromancy, (not by any means unusual in the old writers of Romance,) by which they were thrown into a state of insensibility.

Hospice.—Page 83.

Spytty.—This term is derived from the Latin word Hospitium, and is used to designate those establishments which were erected and maintained by the Monks, for the reception of travellers. They bore some remote resemblance to our present Inns, and were generally placed in secluded spots at a distance from any town. Several places in Wales retain the recollection of these hospitable institutions in the name they still bear, as Spytty Ivan, Spytty Cynvyn, &c.

Ravens.—Page 84.

As some explanation of this strange expression, it may be noticed, that in another of the Mabinogion, called the "Dream of Ronabwy," Owain is represented as having an army of Ravens in his service, which are engaged in combat with some of Arthur's attendants. But in that, as well as in the present Tale, the adventure is introduced with an abruptness that can only be accounted for by supposing that the story was well known, and that it formed a part of that great depository of Romance, which existed among the Welsh, and which furnished to the other nations of Europe the earliest materials of imaginative composition. This Raven Army of the Prince of Rheged has evidently a connection with the armorial bearings of that house already alluded to.

YWAYNE AND GAWIN.

The English version of this Tale, called "Ywayne and Gawin," to which reference has been frequently made in the preceeding notes, exists in MS. in the British Museum. It was published by Ritson, in the 1st Vol. of his Metrical Romances, and is supposed by him to be of the reign of Richard II. A facsimile of the concluding column of the MS. which is believed to be unique, is annexed.

On a comparison of this Romance with the "Chevalier au Lyon," it is curious to find that it is rendered almost word for word from the French. Ellis attributes its translation to Clerk of Tranent; and he gives it character for considerable poetical merit. Spec. E. R. I. 345.

Although the foundation of the story is the same as that of the Welsh Mabinogi, we find that in many instances the circumstances differ.

In the first place, when Colgrevaunce has related his adventure at the Fountain, Arthur determines to undertake an expedition to the spot; but Owain, jealous that any one but himself should perform the exploit, sets out in the mean time, alone, and by stealth, and is duly installed to all the rights and duties of the Black Knight, by the time Arthur arrives. Kai, moreover, is the only one that jousts with Owain, who declares his name as soon as his old reviler is overthrown. There is no mention, either in the French or English version, of the three years' feast, which in the Welsh forms so amusing an episode.

When Owain takes his leave of the Countess, to visit the Island of Britain, she stipulates that he shall return that day twelvemonth, which he engages to do, unless prevented by illness or imprisonment. The Countess gives him a ring, which will prevent either of these misfortunes befalling him, thus allowing him no excuse for absenting himself beyond the time agreed upon. Under these circumstances, we cannot be surprised at her displeasure, nor at Owain's losing his senses, on his having his ring taken from him, and being so stoutly and so publicly accused of treachery. After Owain goes out of his mind, we find him sensible enough to covet some poor stranger's bow and arrows, which, when he has possession of, he applies to a very rational purpose, that of providing himself with food. This he eats raw, until he meets with a hermit, who has compassion on him, and being himself accustomed but to bread and water, is glad to furnish these necessaries to Owain, and also to cook his venison for him, in consideration of being well supplied with that dainty in return. The story becomes, in many respects, dissimilar from the Welsh, after the incident of Luned's rescue from the stake.

"Le Sire de la noire espine" leaving two daughters to inherit his property; the elder determines to possess herself of the whole, and appoints a champion to maintain her cause, while the younger appeals for protection to the Chevalier au Lyon, and obtains a delay of forty days before the trial takes place. Owain accompanies the damsel to Arthur's Court, where the cause is to be decided; and on the way he meets with an adventure somewhat resembling that of the savage black man, which occurs at the close of the Welsh Tale. In a beautiful city, named in English the "Castel of the hevy sorrow," and in the French the "Chastel de pesme auenture," he finds a number of ladies "wirkand silk and gold wir." They are very meanly attired, and inform Owain that they were once of great estate in the Country of Mayden-land, whence they were sent as hostages by their sovereign. They complain that they have to work very hard, and for a very slight remuneration, the best of them receiving only "four penys" in a week, which was scarce sufficient to maintain them, whereas they consider that they might earn "fourty shilling."

Proceeding to explore the wonders of this Castle,

"Thurgh the hal sir Ywain gase,
Intil ane orcherd playn pase,
His maiden with him ledes he,
He fand a knyght under a tre,
Opon a clath of gold he lay,
By for him sat a ful fayr may;
A lady sat with tham in fere,
The mayden red at thai myght her
A real romance in that place
Bot i ne wote of wham it was."—3090.

These worthies entertain him very hospitably that night; but when he is preparing to depart the next day, he finds he has to encounter two monsters, by whom all the strangers who go to that Castle are slain. Owain, with his faithful lion's assistance, however, overcomes his fierce opponents; and after refusing the hand of the "fayr may," which is pressed upon him even with threats, and stipulating for the liberation of the industrious damsels, he proceeds on his way. According to custom, he reaches the Court of Arthur only just in time to enter the lists against the champion of the Sire de noire espine's elder daughter, who already begins to congratulate herself, that no one will appear to contest her claim to the whole estate. The combat lasts till dark, when a parley ensues, and Owain finds that it was Gawain, to whom he had been opposed; whereupon a great deal that is very complimentary is expressed on both sides. King Arthur then makes a very just division of property between the two sisters; concerning which we are told,

"This land was first, i understand
That ever was parted in Ingland.
Than said the king, Withowten fail,
For the luf of that batayl,
Al sisters that sold after bene
Sold part the landes tham bitwene."—line 3772.

After this Owain's trials come to a close; through the intervention of Luned, he becomes happily reconciled to the Countess; and we are told, in conclusion,

"And so sir Ywain and his wive
In joy and blis thai led thair live," &c.

LE CHEVALIER AU LION.

Of this Romance, which in its present form, is said to be the production of Chrestien de Troyes, a celebrated Trouvère of the 12th Century, several MS. copies exist in the Bibliothèque du Roi; all of which differ from each other in orthography, and sometimes, though not materially, in diction also; as may be seen in the introduction to the Brut of Wace, by Le Roux de Lincy, who gives some notices of these MSS. together with a few lines, as specimens.

The MS. from which the Copy now published was taken, is a vellum folio of the 13th Century, written in double columns, and marked "1891 Suppl. fr. 210." The annexed facsimile will afford an example of the style of hand-writing.

Me sire G mlt' sen rit.
De ce q̄le li conte et dit.
Madamoisele ie uos doig.
Et a mestier et a besoiḡ.
.I. tel ch'r com ie sui.
Ne me changiez ia por autrui.
Se amender ne uos cuidiez.
Je sui uostres et uos soiez.
Dor en auant ma damoisele.
Vostre merci sire fit ele.
Einseint cil dui sent"cointerent.
Et li aut' sentredonerent.
Q' bien en iot tels nouante.
Q' chascune estoit bele et gente.
Noble et cointe et gente et sage.
Damoisele de haut parage.
Si se pooient solatier.
De la coler et del besier.
Et de parler et de ueoir.
Et de les eles seoir.
Q' tant en orent il aumeīs.
Or a feste me sire Y.
Del roi qui auec lui demore.
Et la dame touz les honore.
Chascun par soi et touz ēsēble.
A chascun mal eure semble.
Q' damors uieigne cel arret.
Et le semblant q̄le lor fet.
Et cels puet en biē fox clamer.
Q' cuident q̄ les ueuille amer.
Q"nt une dame est tant cortoise.
Q"nt .I. maleure adoise.
Si cuide q̄l leuueile amer.
Celui doit len bien fol clam'.
Si la len mlt' tost amuse.
A g"nt ioie ont le tanz use.
Trestoute la semaine entiere.
Deduit de bois et de riuiere.
Iot mlt' qui li uolt auoir.
Et qui la t're uolt sauoir.

Q' me sire Y ot conquise.
A la dame que il ot prise.
Si se repot aler esbatre.
Pres a .III. liues ou a q"tre.
Par les chastiaus ilec entor.
Q"nt li Rois ot fet son seior.
Tant quil ni uolt plus arester.
Si refest son erre aprester.
Mes il auoient la semaine.
Trestuit prie et nus g"nt peine.
De q"n quil se porent pener.
Coment en porroient men'.
Mon seignor Y auec eus.
Coment seriez uos de cels.
Honiz soit de sainte marie.
Q' por empirier se marie.
Et por lor fames ualent meīs.
Ce li dist me sire G.
Amender doit de bele dame.
Q' laime ou qui la prent a fame.
Ne nest pas droiz que ele laint.
Q"nt ses pris et ses los remaint.
Certes encor seroiz iriez.
De samor se uos empiriez.
Q' fame a tost samor rep'se.
Ne na pas tort sele mesprise.
Celui qui por samor empire.
Q"nt il est sires de lempire.
Or primes doit uſe honors c"istre.
Rompez le frein et le cheuestre.
Sirom tornoier moi et uos.
Q' len ne uos apiant ialous.
Or ne deuez uos pas songier.
Mes les tornoiemenz ongier.
En prendre estors et bien joster.
Q' que il uos doie coster.
Asez songre qui ne se muet.
Certes uenir uos en estuet.
Et ie fere en uſe enseigne.
Or gardez qū uos ne remeigne.
Biaus compainz uſe ꝯpeignie.
En moi ne remandra il mie.

Merueille est comẽt il a cure.
De lese qui touz iorz li dure.
Boen adoneist a delaier.
Et plus est douz a lessaier.
Vns petit biens q̃ len delaie.
Q' g"nz q̃ len a des essaie.
Joie damor qui uiẽt atart.
Semble la uert buche qui art.
Q' dedens rent si g"nt chalor.
Et defors tient tant sa ualor.
Complus se tient a aualer.
Len puet tel chose acostum'.
Q' mlt' par est gries a reti"re.
Q"nt lenleuelt len nel puet faire.
Et porce ne le dige mie.
Se iauoie si bele amie.
Com uos auez biaus douz amis.
Foi q̃ doi deu et ses amis.
Mlt' aenuis men ptiroie.
Mien escient fox en seroie.
Mes tex conseille bien autrui.
Qui ne sauroit conseillier lui.
Ausint com cil preeschor.
Q' sont desleal lecheor.
Q' enseignent fere le bien.
Dont il ne uos en feront rien.
Mesire G tant li dist.
Ceste parole et tant li quist.
Quil lui creanta quil iroit.
A sa dame si li diroit.
Sil en puet le congie auoir.
Ou face folie ou sauoir.
Ne lera q̃ congie ne preigne.
De retorner en la Breteigne.
La dame en a a conseil trete.
Q' dou conseil pas ne se guete.
Si li dist ma tres douce amie.
Vos qui estes mes cuerz mauie.
Mes biens ma ioie ma santez.
Vne chose me creantez.
Por ũre honor et por la moie.
La dame tantost li otroie.
Q'ne set quil uelt demander.
Et dist biau sire comander.
Me poez q"nque boen uosiert.
Meintenant cõgie li requiert.
Mesire Y de tornoier.
Et daler le roi conuoier.
Q' len ne la piant recreant.
La dame dist iel uos creant.
Le congie iusq" .I. t'miñe.
Mes lamors deuẽdra haine.
Q' iai a uos iert ensaiez.
Certes se uos trespassiez.
Le t'mine q̃ uos dirai.
Ia uoirne uos en ñtirai.
Se uos mentez ie dire uoir.
Se uos uolez mamor auoir.
Et de rien nule mauez chiere.
Pensez de reuenir arriere.
A tout le mains iusq" .I. an.
Jusq" la feste saint iehan.
Hui en cest ior sont les octaues.
Demainor seroz maz et haues.
Se uos nestes iusq" ce ior.
Auec moi ceenz a seior.
Me sire Y plore et soupire.
Si fort qua poine li puet dire.
Dame cist t'mes est trop lons.
Se ie poie estre colons.
Toutes les foiz q̃ ie uoldroie.
Mlt' souent auec uos seroie.
Et ie prie deu se il li plest.
Q' tant demorer ne me lest.
Mes tex cuide tost reuenir.
Q' ne set quest a auenir.
Et ie ne se que auendra.
Se essomes me detendra.
Ou de malage ou de prison.
Sauez de tant fet mesprison.
Q' uos nen auez mis dehors.
Se neans lessonie de mon cors.
Sire fet ele et ie li met.
Et ne porq"nt bien uos promet.

Q' se dex de mort uos deffent.
Nut essoines ne uos atent.
Porq̄ uos soviegne de moi.
Metez ores en ūſe doi.
Cest mien anel q̄ ie uos prest.
Et de la pierre quex ele est.
Vos dirai ie tot en apert.
Prison nel tient ne sanc ne pert.
Nus amis uerais et laiaus.
Ne auenir ne li puet maus.
Mes quil le gart et chier le tiegne.
Et de samie li souieigne.
Eincois deuient durs come fers.
Il uos est escuz et haub's.
Onq̄s mes a nul ch'r.
Ne le uols liurer ne baillier.
Mes uos par chierte le p'st gie.
Or a me sire Y congie.
Sa mlt' plore au cōgie pūdre.
Et le rois ne uolt plus atendre.
Por rien q̄ dire li seust.
Einz li tarde q̄n li eust.
Ses palefroizz tou enselez.
Apareilliez et amenez.
Desquil le uolt' molt' fu tost fet.
Li palefroi li sont forz trait.
Si nia mes q̄de monter.
Ne sai q̄ uos doie conter.
Coment me sire Y senpart.
Des douz baisiers com il depart.
Li furent de soupirs seme.
Et de doucor enbalsame.
Et du roi que uos conteroie.
Coment la dame les coñoie.
Et li seneschaux auec lui.
Et les puceles autresi.
Trop i feroie g"nt demore.
Por ice q̄ la dame plore.
Pria li rois de remanoir.
Et de raler en son manoir.
Tant li pria q̄ ag"nt poine.
Sont retorne sa gēt ēmaine.
Me sire Y mlt' aenuiz.
Est de la dame departiz.
Et si q̄ li cuers ne se muet.
Li rois mener le cors en puet.
Mes dou cuer nē merra il poist.
Car il se tient si et se ioint.
Au cuer de cele qui remaint.
Q'l na pooir q̄ il lenmeint.
Des q̄ li cors est sanz le cuer.
Donc ne puet il uiure a nul fuer.
Et se li cors sanz le cuer uit.
Tel m'ueille nus hōme uit.
Ceste merueille est auenue.
Q' la la uie est retenue.
Sanz le cuer qui est' i soloit.
Q' plus siure ne le uoloit.
Li cuers a boñe remanāce.
Et li cors uit en espance.
De retorner au cuer arriere.
Si fet cuer destrâge maniere.
Desperance qui mlt' souent.
Traist et fause maīte gent.
Ia ce cuit lore ne sa"u.
Quesperance tr" laura.
Q' se il .1. sol ior trespasse.
Le terme qui est mis a masse.
Mlt' aenuiz trouera mes.
Vers la dame t'ne ne pes.
Je cuit quil le trespassera.
Q' departir nel lessera.
Mesire G auec lui.
Car au tornoi senuont andui.
Par touz les leus ou le tornoie.
Et li anz passe toute uoie.
Sil fist si bien me sire Y.
Tout lan et me sire G.
De lui se penoit ēñorer.
Et si le fist tant demorer.
Q' trestouz li anz fu passez.
Et puis apres de laut' assez.
Tant q̄ la mi aoust auint.
Q' li rois cort a cestre tint.

Et furent la ueille deuant.
Reuenu dou torneiment.
Ou me sire Y ot este.
Se not tout le pris aporte.
Et dit li contes ce me semble.
Q' li dui ꝓpeignon ensemble.
Ne uoldrent en nul leu descẽdre.
Einz firent lor paueilons tẽdre.
Hors de la uile et cort tindrent.
Onq̃s a cort de roi ne uindrẽt.
Eincois uint li rois a la lor.
Car auec aus sont li meillor.
Des ch'rs et touz li plus.
Entrels seoit li rois Art°.
Tant q̃ Y en comenca.
A parler et des lors en ca.
Q' a sa dame ot congie pris.
Ne fu tant de penser sorp's.
Com de cele q̃ bien sauoit.
Q' couẽt menti li auoit.
Et trespassez estoit li t'mes.
A g"nt peine retint ses lermes.
Mes honte li fet retenir.
Tant pense q̃ il uoit uenir.
Vne damoisele adroite'\.
Et uenoit mlt' g"nt aleure.
Sor .I. palefroi uer baucent.
Deuant le paueillon descent.
Q' nus ne fu a son descendre.
Ne nus nala son cheual p'ndre.
Et lues q̃ ele pot ueoir.
Le roi si laissa ius cheoir.
Son mantel et dela fu blee.
Sen est el paueillon entree.
Et tres deuant le roi uenue.
Et dit q̃ sa dame salue.
Le roi et mon seignor G.
Et touz les autres sanz Y.
Le desloial le traitor.
Le mẽcongier le iengleor.
Q' la lessiee et deceue.
Bien est sa gengle apceue.
Q' se fesoit laiaux amerres.
Si est fel deslaiaux et lerres.
Madame a cist lerres conduite.
Q' nestoit de nul mal recuite.
Ne ne cuidoit pas a nul fuer.
Qil li deust tolir son cuer.
Cil nemblent pas le cuer qui aiment.
Si a tex qui larrons les claiment.
Si en uont amor fauuoiant.
Si nen seuent ne tant ne q"nt.
Li amis prent le cuer samie.
Enseint q̃ il ne lemble mie.
Einz se gardent q̃ ne li emblẽt.
Larron qui preudome resemblẽt.
Ce sont larron et ypoc'te.
Et traitor qñ meinte luite.
Set cuer embler ou q̃il aut.
Mes li amis cui il en chaut.
Le retient et si le raporte.
Mes Y a madame morte.
Q' le cuidoit quil li gardast.
Son cuer et quil li raportast.
Eincois q̃ fust passé li anz.
Y com fust sor oublianz.
Q"nt il ne ce pot souenir.
Q' tu deusses reuenir.
A ma dame iusq" .I. an.
Iusqua la feste saint jehan.
Te doua el por uoir respit.
Et tu leus en tel despit.
Q' onques puis ne tẽmẽbra.
Madame peint en sa chãbre a.
Trestouz les iors et touz les tens.
Car qui aime est en g"nt porpẽs.
Nonq̃s ne pot prẽdre boen some.
Toute nuit a conte et asome.
Les iorz qui uienẽt et qui uont.
Et des maus que li amant ont.
Contre le tens et la seson.
Nest pas uenue sanz reson.
Sa ꝓpleinte et deuant le ior.
Si nemẽge rien por clamor.

Mes itant q̄ gabez nosas.
Madame q"nt tu lesposas.
Y na mes cure de toi.
Madame te mande par moi.
Q' iames uers lui ne reuieignes.
Ne son anel pas ne reticignes.
Parmoi q̄ ci en present uois.
Te mande q̄ tu li enuoiz.
Rent li q̄ rendre le testuet.
Y respondre ne li puet.
Q' sens et parole li faut.
Et la pucele auant saut.
Si li oste lanel dou doi.
Et puis comande a deu le roi.
Et touz les autres fors celui.
Q' le laisse en mlt' g"nt ēñui.
Et ses ennuiz ades li croist.
Q"nque ilot tout li encroist.
Et q"nque il ot li eñuie.
Mis se uodroit estre a la fuie.
Touz seus en si sauuache t're.
Q' len ne le seust ou q̄ffe.
Nome ne fame ni eust.
Ne nul qui de lui rien seust.
Ne plus q̄ sil fust en abisme.
Ne het tant riens cō soi meisme.
Ne ne set a cui se confort.
De lui q' soit meisme a mort.
Dentre les barons se remue.
Mes ainz uoudra le sens chāgier.
Q' il ne se puisse uenchier.
De lui qui ioie sest tolue.
Dentre les barons se remue.
Quil cuide entraus issir dou sen.
Ne de ce ne se garde len.
Si len lesserent sol aler.
Bien seuent q̄ de lor pler.
Ne de lor siecle na il soing.
Puis ala tant q̄ il fu loing.
Des tentes et des paueillous.
Lors li môte uns estorbeillous.
El chief si g"nt q̄ il fors señe.
Si se descire et depēne.
Si fuit par chans et par arees.
Et par forez longues et lees.
Lors se merueillent ou puet estre.
Q'rant le uont par tout lor estre.
Par lest hostex au ch'rs.
Et par haies et par uergiers.
Le quierent la ou il nest pas.
Fuiant sēuet plus que le pas.
Tant quil troua delez .I. parc.
.I. garcon qui portoit .I. arc.
Sot tant de sens q̄ au garcon.
Sot aler tolir son arcon.
Et v. seetes barbelees.
Q' mlt' ierent longues et lees.
Les seetes q̄ il tenoit.
Porce mes ne li souenoit.
De rien nule quil eust fete.
Les bestes par le bois aguete.
Puis les ocist et ses meniue.
La uenoison trestoute crue.
Et tant con'usa el bochage.
Come forsene et sauuage.
Qune meson a .1. hermite.
Troua mlt' basse et mlt' petite.
Et li hermites essartoit.
Q"nt celui uit qui nuz uenoit.
Bien por sauoir sanz nul redout.
Q' il not mie le senz tout.
Et si fist il tres bien le sot.
De la g"nt poor q̄ il ot.
Se feri en sa mesonete.
Dou pein dorge et de leue nete.
Par charite prist li boens hom.
De sor une fenestre estroite.
Et cil i uient qui mlt' conoite.
Le pein si uient la et si mort.
Ne cuit q̄ onques de si fort.
Ne de si aspre eust gouste.
Ne nauoit pas xx. t couste.

Li setiers dont fu fez li peinz.
Q' fu plus egres que le ueins.
Dorge petri a tout la paille.
Et auec ce fu il sanz faille.
Moisiz et sec come une escorce.
Mes la fains langoisse et efforce.
Tant que le pou li sot li pains.
Q' a tous mes essauce fains.
Bien destrempee et bien confite.
Tout menia le pain a lermite.
Mesire Y q̄ boen li fot.
Et but de leue froide au pot.
Q"nt mēgie ot si se refiert.
El bois et biches et cers q'ert.
Et li boens hom de souz son toit.
Prie dieu q"nt aler lenuoit.
Q'l le deffende et quil le gart.
Q' mes ne uoise cele part.
Mes riens nest tant poi de sens ait.
Q' en leu ou len bien li fait.
Ne reuieigne mlt' uolentiers.
Ne passa pas .I. iors entiers.
Tant come il fu en cele rage.
Q' aucune beste sauuage.
Ne li aportast ā son huis.
I ceste uie mena puis.
Et li boens hom sentremetoit.
De lescorchier et si metoit.
Assez de la uenoison cuire.
Le pain dorge et leue en la luire.
Estoit touz iorz en la fenestre.
Por lome forsene repestre.
Sauoit a mengier et a boiure.
Venoison sanz sel et sanz poiure.
Et eue froide de fonteine.
Et li boens hom estoit en peine.
Des cuirs uendre et acheter pein.
Dorge ou dauoine ou dautre grein.
Si ot puis toute sa liuroison.
Pain a plente et uenoison.
Q' li dura tant longuement.
Cun ior le trouerent dormant.
En la forest .III. damoiseles.
Et une lor dame auec eles.
De cui mesnie eles estoient.
Ves lome nu q̄ eles uoient.
Cort et descent lune des trois.
Mes mlt' lesgarderent eincois.
Q' rien nule sor lui ueist.
Q' reconoistre li feist.
Si lauoit ele tant ueu.
Q' tost leust reconeu.
Au reconoistre mlt' tarda.
Et toutes uoies lesgarda.
Se il fu de si riche atour.
Come il auoit este maīt ior.
Tant q"n la fin li fu auis.
Dune plaie quil ot el uis.
Cune autre tele plaie auoit.
Me sire Y bien le sauoit.
Sor lui lauoit souent ueue.
P la plaie sest parceue.
Q' ce estil de rien nen doute.
Mes de ce se merueile toute.
Coment ce li est auenu.
Se rage el chief ne la tenu.
Mlt' se seigne mlt' se merueile.
Mes ne le bonte ne sueile.
Einz prent son cheual si remōte.
Puis uient os autres si lor conte.
Sauenture tote emplorant.
Ne sai q"lasse demorant.
Ne conter le duel q̄le fist.
Mes plorant a so dame dist.
Dame ie ai Y troue.
Le ch'r meus esproue.
Del mont et le meuz enseignie.
Mes ie ne sai par quel pechie.
Au franc home est mesauenu.
Espoir aucun duel a eu.
Q' le fet enseint demener.
En puet bien de duel forsener.
Et sauoir et uooir puet len.
Q'l nest mie bien en son sen.

Ce dist la dame or naiez soig.
Q' certes se il ne sen fuit.
Alaide de deu ce cuit.
Li osterons nos de la teste.
Toute la rage et la tempeste.
Mes mlt' tost aler mē conient.
Car dun oignemēt me soviēt.
Q' me dona morgant la sage.
Et si me dist q̄ nule rage.
Nest en teste q̄ il nen ost.
Vers le chastel sen uienēt tost.
Q' pres est et ni auoit pas.
Apres demie liue .I. pas.
Au liues qui el pais sont.
Q' a mesure des noz font.
De .II. une et de q"tre .II.
Y. remest dormant touz seus.
Et cele va longuemēt querre.
La dame .I. suen escrin desserre.
Sen trest la boiste et si la charge.
A la damoisele trop large.
Si li prie mlt' et chastie.
Q' loignement ni meste mie.
Fors les temples et le front oigne.
Q" illors point metre nē besoigne.
Et le remanant bien li gart.
Quil na point de mal aut' part.
Fors que solement el ceruel.
Robe uere cote et mantel.
Li fes porter de soie en g"ne.
Si li charge et si li maine.
.I. palefroi en destre boen.
Et auec ce i mest dou suen.
Chemise et braies delices.
Et chauces noires bien tailies.
A tout la boite einseint senua.
Encor celui dormant troua.
La ou ele lauoit lessie.
Les cheuaux mest en .I. plessie.
Ses atache et lie mlt' fort.
Puis uient a celui q' se dort.
A tout les dras et loignemēt.
Et si fust mlt' g"nt hardement.
Del forsene que ele aprouche.
Q' le manoie et atouche.
Et prent loignemēt si len oint.
Tant come en la boite en poīt.
Car sa garison tant couoite.
Et de loindre partout esploite.
Et si le met tot en despense.
Q' li ne chaut de la deffense.
Sa dame ne ne len souient.
Car plus i met quil ne couient.
Q'l li est auis bien lenploie.
Le front et la temple li froie.
Et le chief et trestout le cors.
Q' dou ceruel li geta hors.
La rage et la melancolie.
Mes dou cors oindre fist folie.
Q'il nen estoit nus mestiers.
Sil en ieust .c. setiers.
Sen eust autel fet ce cuit.
La boite prent puis si senfuit.
Si sest neis les cheuaux reposte.
Mais sa robe pas ne li oste.
Porce que dex la li enuoie.
Velt q" pareillie la uoie.
Et quil la preigne et quil la ueste.
De lez .I. g"nt chesne sareste.

Q' li aist et qui len meint.
Q' si la li g"nz mals ateint.
Q" poine puet sor piez ester.
Or mes ni uelt plus arester.
La damoisele einz est mõtee.
Par de lez lui en est alee.
Si come ele ne li seust.
Et cil qui g"nt mestier eust.
Daide ne li chausist quel.
Q'l le menast a .I. ostel.
Tant q̃ il refust en sa force.
De lui rapeler mlt' sefforce.
La damoisele tout ausi.
Vet regardant enuiron lui.
Com sele ne seust quil a.
Et il li dist deca deca.
Q' droit uers lui ne uelt aler.
Si recomence a apeler.
Damoisele deca deca.
Et la pucele sadreca.
Vers lui son palefroi amblant.
Cuidier li fist par tel semblant.
Q' le delui rien ne sauoit.
Nonq̃s mais ueu ne lauoit.
Et sens et cortoisie fist.
Q"nt deuant lui fu si li dist.
Sire ch'rs que uolez.
Q' a tel besoig mapelez.
Hai damoisele tres sage.
Trouez me sui en cest boschage.
Je ne sai par quel meschaance.
Por deu et por uře creance.
Vos pri en trestouz guerredon.
Me prestez et donez en don.
Ce palefroi q̃ uos tenez.
Volentiers sire mes uenez.
Auec moi la ou ie men uois.
Quil part fet il hors de sest bois.
Jusq" .I. chastel ci selonc.
Volentiers or me dites donc.
Se uos auez besoig de moi.
Oil uoir sire mes ie croi.
Q' uos ne seroiz mie seins.
Vos couendroit a seior estre.
Le cheual que ie mein endestre.
Prenez sirons iusq" lostel.
Et cil qui ne demandoit el.
Le prent et mõtent si senont.
Tant que il uindrent a .I. pont.
Dont leue estoit noire et bruianz.
Et la damoisele rue enz.
La boite q̃ le porte vuide.
Einseint uers sa dame se cuide.
De son oignement escuser.
Q' le dira que au passer.
Del pont einseint li meschai.
Et la boite en leue chai.
Porce que desouz lui coupa.
Ses palefroiz li eschapa.
Des poinz la boite et a bien pres.
Q' ele ne chai apres.

Q' len li poist empoignier.
La barbe iusque sus la face.
Ne uelt chose que ne li race.
Sil uelt armes en li atorne.
Sil uelt cheual en li seiorne.
Et est mlt' biaus forz et hardiz.
Tant seiorna q̄ .I. mardi.
Vint au chastel li cuens aliers.
O serianz et o cheualiers.
Et mistrent feus et pristrent proies.
Et cil dou chastel toute uoies.
Sarment et darmes se garnissent.
Arme et desarme sen issent.
Tant q̄ les oreors ateignent.
Q' por eus foir ne se deignent.
Eincois les ateignent el pas.
Mesire Y se met el tas.
Q' tant ot este seiornez.
Qñ sa force fu retornez.
Si feri de si g"nt uertu.
.I. ch'r de son escu.
Quil mist en .I. mōt ce me semble.
Cheual et ch'r ensemble.
Conq̄s puis cil ne releua.
Que el uentre li cuers li creua.
Et fu parmi lechine frez.
Vn petit sest arriefe trez.
Mesire Y et si recueure.
Trestouz de son escu se cueure.
Et point por le pas deliurer.
Plus tost qñ ne porroit nōbrer.
Et .I. et .II. et .III. et quatre.
Q' len ne li ueist abatre.
Plus tost et plus menuemēt.
Q"tre ch'rs erraument.
Et cil qui auec lui estoient.
Plus g"nt hardement en p'noient.
Q tex a poure cuer et lache.
Q"nt uoit prodome q' entache.
Deuant lui une g"nt besoigne.
Q' maintenant honte et u'goigne.
Li cort sore et giete fors.
Le mauues cuer quil a elcors.
Si li done tot maintenant.
Cuer de prodome et hardemēt.
Einseint font cil deuenu preu.
Si tient chascuns mlt' biē son ieu.
As lances trenchanz en lestor.
Et la dame est en la tor.

De son chastel montée en haut.
Si uit la meslee et lasaut.
Au pas descombrer et cõq̃ffe.
Sen uoitassez gesir a t're.
Des afolez et des ociz.
Des suens et de ses anemis.
Mes plus des autrui q̃ des suens.
Car li cortois li biaus li boens.
Me sire Y tout autresi.
Les fesoit uenir a merci.
Com li faucons fet les cerceles.
Et disoient et cil et celes.
Q' el chastel remes estoient.
Et la bataille regardoient.
Hai com uaillant soudaier.
Com fet ses anemis plaier.
Confaitement il les requiert.
Tout autresi entraus se fiert.
Com li lyons entre les dains.
Q"nt angoisse le chace et fains.
Et tuit ufe autre ch'r.
En sont plus hardi et plus fier.
Q' ia se par lui sol ne fust.
Lance brisiee ni eust.
Nespee trete por ferir.
Mlt' doit len amer et cherir.
Vn home preuz q"nt en le t'ue.
Veez ore come il se proue.
Veez come il se fiert el renc.
Veez come il porte de sanc.
Et la lance et lespee nue.
Veez com tost il se remue.
Veez coment il les entasse.
Come il lor uient et come il passe.
Come il guenchist ome il t'storne.
Et en guenchir petit seiorne.
Pou seiorne en son retor.
Come il reuient tost en léstor.
Come il a poi son escu chier.
Come il le fait fort detrench'.
Ne na pitie ne tant ne q"nt.
Mes il se remet mlt' en g"nt.
Des coux uenchier q̃ len li done.
Q' de trestout le bois dargone.
Auroit fetes lances ce cuit.
Ni auroit il nule enq̃nuit.
Car il nen puet tant met' el faut'.
Come il pecoie et demande aut'.
Or oiez coment il le fet.
De lespee q"nt il la tret.
Onq̃s ne fist de durendart.
Rolanz des tuss si q"nt essart.
En renceuax ne en espeigne.
Se il eust en sa compeigne.
Auques de si sez copeignons.
Li cuiuers dont nos nospleignõs.
Sen alast ce cuit desconfiz.
Ou il remainsist touz honiz.
Et dient que buer seroit nec.
Cui il auroit sa mor donee.
Q' si est as armes poissanz.
Et de sor touz reconoissanz.
Si com cierges entre chãdeles.
Et la lune entre les estoiles.
Et li soleuz desor la lune.
Et de chascun et de chascune.
A si les cuers que tuit uoudroiẽt.
Por la proece q̃n lui uoient.
Q' il eust la dame prise.
Et fust leñors en sa joustise.
Einseint tuit et toutes p'soient.
Celui dont uerite disoient.
Q' cels de la a si atainz.
Q' il sen fuient q' einz einz.
Mes il les enchance si pres.
Et si compeignon tuit apres.
Q' de lui sont aus si seur.
Com sil fussent dedenz .I. mur.
Haut et espes de pierre dure.
La chace tant longuemẽt dure.
Tant que de foir tuit estanchent.
Et cil qui chacent les detrenchent.
Et les cheuaux lor esboelent.
Les uis desor les morz roelent.

Si sentrafolent et ocient.
Et ledement se cont"lient.
Et li cuens tot ades senfuit.
Et me sire Y le conduit.
Q' de lui siure ne se feint.
Tant le chace q̄ il lateint.
Au pie dune roide montee.
Et ce fu mlt' pres de lentree.
D'un fort recest q' estoit suens.
Jlec fu retenuz li cuens.
Conq̄s rien ne li ot mestier.
Et sanz trop longuemēt pledier.
Emprist la foi me sire Y.
Et desque il le tint au mains.

Combatre et q̄ sor lui uenist.
Mes il ne le se pensa onq̄s.
Oiez q̄ fist le lyon donq̄s.
Com fist q̄ frans et deboeñere.
Q' il en comēca a fere.
Semblant q̄ a lui se rendoit.
Et ses piez joins li estendoit.
Et uers lui enclinoit sa chiere.
Et estut sor les piez derriere.
Et puis si se ragenoiloit.
Et toute sa face moilloit.
De lermes par humilite.
Mesire Y por uerite.
Set que li lyons le mercie.
Et enuers lui si sumelie.
Si li plest mlt' ceste auēture.
Por leueñi et por lordure.
Del serpent essuie lespee.
Si la ra el fuerre boutee.
Puis si se met tost ā la uoie.
Et le lyon les lui costoie.
Q' iames ne le g'pira.
Touz iorz auēcqs lui ira.
Q' seruir et garder le uelt.

Por el fet il ne uing ge ca.
Sire il auint mlt' g"nt piece a.
Q' li rois de lille as puceles.
Aloit por aprendre noueles.
Par les cors et par lepais.
Sala tant come foux nais.
Quil sembati en cest peril.
En mal eur i uenist il.
Q' nos chaitiues qui ci somes.
Le duel et le mal en auomes.
Q' onques ne le deservimes.
Et sachiez bien q̃ uos meismes.
I poez mlt' g"nt honte atendre.
Se rencon nen uolez rendre.
Mes toutes uois issi auint.
Q' li rois en cest chastel uint.
Ou il a .II. fiz de deables.
Ne le tenez uos mie a fables.
Q' de fame et de nuiton furent.
Icil dui combatre se durent.
Au roi dont doulors fu mlt' g"nz.
Q' nauoit pas passe xv anz.
Si le poissent tuit porfendre.
Ausi come .I. nauelet tendre.
Et li rois qui g"nt poor ot.
Se deliura au meuz quil pot.

Chascun autant cõ droiz seroit.
Ceenz de ses puceles xxx.
Si fu quites par itel rente.
Si fu iure au deuiser.
Q' cist treuz deuoit durer.
Tant com cil dui malfe durroient.
Et meintenant q̃ il seroient.
Conquis et ueincu en bataille.
Q' tes seroit de ceste taille.
Et lors serom nos deliurees.
Q' a dulor somes liurees.
Et a martire et a mesese.
James naurõs riens qui nos plese.
Mlt' ai or dite g"nt enfance.
Q' parlai dela deliurance.

Mlt' ua reu'chant par leenz.
Mes ne set par ou il sen aille.
Bien ot les coux de la bataille.
Q' perilleuse est et uileine.
Et porce si g"nt duel demaine.
Q'l enrage uis et forsenne.
Tant ua reu'chant quil a sane.
Au sueil qui porrisoit sor t're.
Tant i grate quil si enserre.
Et fiche iusq" pres des reins.
Et ia estoit me sire Y.
Mlt' trauailliez et mlt' suanz.
Q' mlt' troua les .II. geanz.
Fors et felons et endurez.
Mlt' auoit ia coux endurez.
Et renduz tant come il plus pot.
Nonq̄s de rien greuez nes ot.
Q' trop sauoient descremie.
Et lor escu nestoient mie.

Tant fust trenchanz et aceree.
Et porce se pooit mlt' fort.
Me sire Y douter de mort.
Mes ades tant se contretint.
Q' li lyons outre paruint.
Tant ot de ce suel grate.
Sor ne sont li felon mate.
Donc ne le feront il iames.
Car au lyon terme ne pes.
Nauront il tant cō uis les sache.
.I. en aert et si le sache.
Parterre ausi come .I. mouton.
Or sont effree li gloton.
Et na home en toute la place.
Q' en son cuer ioie nen face.
Q' cil nen reluera ia.
Q' li lion os a t're a.
Se li autres ne li secort.
Por lui aidier cele part cort.
Et por lui meismes deffendre.
Sor lui salast li lions prēdre.
Desquil eust celui ocis.
Q' il auoit par t're mis.
Et si auoit plus g"nt poor.
Del lyon q̄ de son seignor.

Or est mlt' me sire Y soz.
Desquil li a torne le dos.
Et il uoit le col a deliure.
Se longuemẽt le laisse uiu'.
Q' mlt' li est bien auenu.
La teste nue et le col nu.
Li a li glouz abandone.
Et cil li a tel cop done.
Q' la teste dou bu li ret.
Si soauet q̃ mot nẽ set.
Et meintenãt at're uiẽt.
Por laut' q̃ li lyons tient.
Q' rescorre et tolir li uelt.
Mes por neent q̃ trop se deut.
Q' mires a tens ni uendra.
A son uenir si le naura.
Li lyons qui tant est iriez.
Q' ledement fu empiriez.
Mesire Y arriers le boute.
Et uit q̃ il lauoit ia route.
Lespaule et toute dou bu trete.
Q' ce lui point ne se deshaite.
Q' li bastons li est cheuz.
A terre gist come fauz.
Q' ne se croule ne ne muet.
Mes tant ia q̃ parler puet.
Et dist si com il pooit dire.
Ostez ũe lyon biaus sire.
Ie uos pri q̃ plus ne ma doist.
Vñe lyons q̃ il uos loist.
Tout faire q"n q̃ boẽ uos ert.
Q' merci crie et m'ci quiert.
Ne doit faillir q"nt il la roue.
Se home sanz pitie ne t"eue.
Et si ne me deffent or plus.
Ne ia ne me leuerai sus.
Deci porce q̃ merci naie.
Dou tout sui en ũe manaie.
Di donc fet il q̃tu otroies.
Q' ueincuz et recreanz soies.
Veincuz sui malooit gre mien.
Et recreanz ce uos otroi.
Donc nastu mes garde de moi.
Et mes lions te raseure.
Tantost senuient g"nt aleure.
Toute la gent enuirõ lui.
Li sire et la dame auec lui.
Si li font ioie et si lacolent.
Et de lor fille laparolent.
Si li dient or serez uos.
Sire et damoisiaus de nos.
Et nñe fille ert ũe dame.
Et nos nos la donons a fame.
Et ie fet il la uos redoig.
Qm la si soit ie nen ai soig.
Si nel dige pas por desdeig.
Se uos plest q̃ ie ne la preig.
Mes ie ne puis ne ie ne doi.
Mes se uos plest deliurez moi.
Les puceles q̃ uos auez.
Li te'mes est bien le sauez.
Q' les sen doiuent aler q'tes.
Voirs est fet il ce q̃ uos dites.
Et ie les uos rent et aquit.
Qil nia mes nul contredist.
Mes prenez se feroiz sauoir.
Ma fille a trestot mon auoir.
Q' le est mlt' bele et riche et sage.
Iames si riche en mariage.
Nauroiz se cestui ne nauez.
Sire fet il uos ne sauez.
Mon essoine ne mõ a faire.
Ne ie nel uueil or pas ret"ire.
Mes bien sachiez q̃ ie refus.
Ce q̃ ne refuseroit nus.
Q' deust son cuer et sen tente.
Metre en pucele bele et gente.
Q' uolents' la receusse.
Se ie poisse ne deusse.
Ceste ne autre receuoir.
Mes ie ne puis sachiez de uoir.
Si men lessiez en pes atant.
Car la damoisele matent.

Q' est auec moi ca uenue.
Compeignie mi a tenue.
Et ie la li reuueil tenir.
Q' q̄ il mē doie auenir.
Volez biau sire et uos comēt.
Ia mes se ie ne le comant.
Et mes conselz nele ma porte.
Ne uos ert ouerte la porte.
Einz remeindroiz en ma p'son.
Orgueil fetes et mesprison.
Q"nt ie uos pri q̄ uos preigniez.
Ma fille et uos ne deigniez.
Ne deig sire si faz par mame.
Mes ie ne puis esposer fame.
Ne demorer por nule peine.
La damoisele qui mē moine.
Si"ui q"ntrement ne puet estre.
Mes sil uos plest de ma maī dest'.
Vos pleuirai se me creez.
Si com uos ore me ueez.
Reuendrai se ie onq̄s puis.
Et prendrai ufe fille puis.
Q' le hore q̄ il boen uos iert.
Dahe ait fet il qui uos quiert.
Ne foi ne plege ne creante.
Se ma fille uos acreante.
Vos reuendroiz hatiuement.
Ne por foi ne por serement.
Ne cuit q̄ uenissiez plus tost.
Or alez q̄ ie uos en ost.
Touz creantes et touz couenz.
Et si uos tieigne et pluie et uenz.
Et tempeste et g"nz orages.
Se uos nen auez boen corage.
Et g"nt couoitie ne mē chaut.
Biaus douz amis se dex me faut.
Sil est noanz ne me chaut il.
Ie nai pas ma fille si uil.
Q' ie par force la uos doigne.
Or alez en ufe besoigne.
Car tout autant se uos alez.
Men est com se uos remanez.

Atant me sire Y sen torne.
Enz el chastel plus ne seiorne.
Et sen a deuant lui menees.
Les chaitiues desprisonees.
Et li sires li a baillies.
Poures et mal apareillies.
Mes or sont riches ce lor sēble.
Et des dames toutes ensemble.
Deus et deus deuant lui sen issent.
Ne cuidiez pas q̄les feissent.
Si g"nt ioie come eles font.
Porcelui qui fist tout le mōt.
Sil fust dou ciel en terre.
Pes et m'ci li font requerre.
Trestoutes les genz qui loirent.
Tant de honte come il li firent.
Quil le uont issi conuoiant.
Et il dit quil nen set noient.
Ne sai uoir fet il q̄ uos dites.
Si uos en claimge t'stous q'tes.
Conques chose q' en mal tieigne.
Ne deites dont moi souieigne.
Cil sont mlt' lie de ce quil oent.
Et sa cortoisie reloent.
Si le comandent a deu tuit.
Q"nt g"nt piece lorent ꝺduit.
Et les damoiseles li ront.
Congie demande si sen uont.
Au partir toutes li enclinent.
Et si laorent et mercient.
Q' dex li doint ioie et sante.
Et uenir a sa uolente.
Enquelque leu quil onq̄s soit.
Et cil respont dex li ostroit.
Cui la demore mlt' eñuie.
Alez fet il dex uos conduie.
En uoz pais saines et liees.
Meintenant se sont auoiee.
Si sen uont gnt ioie menant.
Et me sire Y meintenant.
De lautre part se rachemine.
Derrer a grant esploit ne fine.

Trestouz les iorz de la semaine.
Si com la pucele le meine.
Q' la uoie mlt' bien sauoit.
Et le recet ou ele auoit.
Lessie la deseritee.
Dehaitee et desconfortee.
Mes q"nt ele oi la nouele.
De la uenue a la pucele.
Et dou ch'r au lyon.
Ne fu ioie se cele non.
Q' ele en ot dedenz son cuer.
Car or cuide ele q̄ sa suer.
De son heritage li lest.
Vne ptie se li plest.
La dame ot geu longuem̄t.
La pucele nouelement.
Estoit de son mal releuee.
Qi longuement lauoit g"uee.
Si quil paroit bien a sa chiere.
A lencontre toute pmiere.
Lor est alee sanz demore.
Si les salue et eñore.
De q"nque ele fet et puet.
De la ioie parler nestuet.
Q' la nuit fu a lostel fete.
Ni ert ia ci parole retrete.
Qar trop i auroit a conter.
Tout uos trespas iusqū mōter.
Des lendemaī quil sen ptirent.
Puis errerent tant q̄ il uirent.
Le chastel ou li rois Artus.
Ot seiorne quīzaine ou plus.
Et la damoisele i estoit.
Q' sa seror deseritoit.
Q'le auoit puis sa cort tenue.
Mes pres atendoit la uenue.
Sa suer qui uient et si aproche.
Mais petit a son cuer li touche.
Q'le ne cuide que len truisse.
Nul cheualier qui sofrir puisse.
Mon seignor G en estor.
Ne il ni auoit mes cun ior.
De la q"ranteine auenir.
Leritage seule a tenir.
Eust deresnie quitemēt.
Par raison et par iugem̄t.
Se cil seus iors fust trespassez.
Mes plus ia a fere assez.
Q' le ne cuide nè ne croit.
En .I. ostel bas et estroit.
Fors dou chastel cele nuit iurent.
Ou nule gent ne reconurent.
Car se il el chastel geussent.
Toutes les genz les coneussēt.
Et de ce nauoient il soig.
Lendemaī a mlt' g"nt besoig.
A laube aparissant sen issent.
Si se reponent et tapissent.
Tant q̄ li iorz fu clers et g"nz.
Iorz orent este ne sai q"nz.
Et me sire G sestoit.
Destornez si qū ne sauoit.
A cort de lui nule nouele.
Fors q̄ soleīnt la pucele.
Por cui il se deuoit ꝯbatre.
Pres a .III. liues ou a q"tre.
Sestoit de la cort destornez.
Et uint a cort si atornez.
Q' reconoitre ne le porēt.
Icil qui touz iorz nen lorēt.
Des armes q̄ il aporta.
La damoisele q' tort a.
Vers sa seror tout en apert.
Voiant toute la cort offert.
Q' par lui deresnier uoldroit.
La q̄rele ou ele na droit.
Et dist au roi sire hore passe.
Iusq" poi sera none basse.
Et li daariens iorz est hui.
Si ueez bien q̄ ie me sui.
Garnie de mon droit tenir.
Et se ma suer deust uenir.
Ni eust mais q̄ demorer.
Deu en puisse ie aorer.

Q"nt ele ne uient ne ne repere.
Bien i pert q̄ meuz ne puet fere.
Si sest por neent t"uailliee.
Et iai este apareilliee.
Trestouz les iorz iusq"u darrien.
Au darrenier ce qui est mien.
Toute ai deresnie la bataille.
Sest desormes droiz q̄ men aille.
Dedenz mon heritage en pes.
Car ie nen respondre iames.
Ama seror tant come uiue.
Si ui"i dolente et chaitiue.
Et li rois qui mlt' bien sauoit.
Porce que ele se tenoit.
Q' la pucele tort auoit.
Vers la seror trop desloial.
Et dist amie en cort roial.
Doit en atendre par ma foi.
Tant com la ioustise le roi.
Siet et atent por droit tenir.
Encor est li iorz auenir.
Encor uendra si com je pense.
Vr̄e seror trestout atens.
Einz q̄ li rois eust bien dit.
Le ch'r au lyon uit.
Et la pucele de lez lui.
Seul a seul uenoient andui.
Q"r dou lion emble se furent.
Si fu remes la ou il iurent.
Li rois la pucele a ueue.
Si ne la pas desconeue.
Et mlt' li plest et embeli.
Q"nt il la uoit car deuers li.
De la querele se tenoit.
Porce que ele se tenoit.
De la ioie q̄ ele en ot.
Li dist an plus tost q̄uil pot.
Or auant bele dex uos saut.
Q"nt lautre lot toute tressaut.
Si se trestorne si la uoit.
Et le ch'r quele auoit.
Amene por son droit qr̄re.
Q'le auoit cerchie par la tr'e.
Mlt' fu bel dou roi apelee.
La pucele et ele est leuee.
Deuant le roi ou el sasist.
Q"nt deuant lui fu si li dist.
Dex saut le roi et sa mesniee.
Rois sor puet estre desresnice.
Ma droiture et ma querele.
Par .I. ch'r donc ert ele.
Par cestui qui soe merci.
Men a suie iusque ci.
Seust il aillors mlt' a fere.
Li frans ch'rs deboēneres.
Mes de moi li prist tex pitiez.
Q'l a ses aferes gitiez.
Et trestouz lessiez por le miē.
Or feroie cortoisie et bien.
Madame ma t's chiere suer.
Cui iaim autant come mō cuer.
Se ele mon droit me lessoit.
Tant q̄ntre moi et lui pes oit.
Car ie ne demant riē dou suen.
Ne ie ne ueil fet el dou tuen.
Q' rien ni as ne ia nauras.
Ia tant preeschier ne sau"s.
Q' riens en port por preeschier.
Toute en porras de duel sechier.
Et lautre respont meintenant.
Q' mlt' est bele et auenant.
Et mlt' est bele et cortoise.
Certes fet ele mlt' me poise.
Q' por nos .II. se combatront.
Dui si prodome com cist sont.
Sest la querele mlt' petite.
Mes ie ne la puis clam' quite.
Car trop g"nt mestier en auroie.
Porce plus g"nt gre uos sauroie.
Se uos men rendiez mō droit.
Certes qui ore respondroit.
Fet lautre mlt' seroit musarde.
Maux feus et male flambe marde.

Se ie ten doig dont tu melz uines.
Eincois assembleront les riues.
De seine et sera prime none.
Se la bataille nel te done.
Dex et li droiz q̄ ie iai.
En qui ie ma fiance ai.
Touz tenz iusq"u ior q' est hui.
En soit en aide a celui.
Q' por aumosne et por franchise.
Se por offre de mō seruise.
Si ne me conoit ne ce lui.
Et si ne set qui ie me sui.
Tant ont ple q" tant remainent.
Les poles et si amainent.
Les ch'rs enmi la cort.
Chascuns por ueoiri acort.
Si com a tele afere suelent.
Corent les genz q' ueoir uelent.
Coux de bataille et descremie.
Mes ne sentreconoissent mie.
Et cil qui ꝯbatte se uolent.
Et qui mlt' ent"mer se suelent.
Et or dont ne sentraiment il.
Et il li respondent nenil.
Q' lun et lautre prouerai.
Si q̄ raison i trouerai.
Por uoir me sire G aime.
Y et ꝯpeignon le claime.
Et Y lui ou que il soit.
Ne sai se il le reconoissoit.
Feroit il ia de lui g"nt feste.
Et si metroit por lui sa teste.
Et cil la soe ausint por lui.
Einz qū li feist g"nt eñui.
Ne est ce amors entiere et fine.
Oil certes mes la haine.
Q' luns a a lautre sanz doute.
Voudroit auoir la teste toute.
Ou tant auoir fet li uoldroit.
De honte q̄ pis en uaudroit.
Parfoi cest merueile prouee.
Q' na aucun uassal trouee.
Damor et haine .I. tor tel.
Deus meismes en .I. hostel.
Coment puet estre li repaires.
A .II. choses qui sont cōt"ires.
En .I. hostel si com moi sēble.
Ne pueent eles estre ensemble.
Q' ne porroit pas remanoir.
Lune auec lautre en .I. manoir.
Q' noise et tencon ni eust.
Por q̄ lune lautre i seust.
Car en chascun a plusor m̄bres.
Q' il ia loges et chambres.
Issi puet bien estre la chose.
Espoir amors estoit enclose.
En aucune chambre celee.
Et haine estoit alee.
Et chambres par deuers la uoie.
Porce q̄l uelt q̄ len lauoie.
Or est haine mlt' encoche.
Q' le esperone et poīt et broche.
Sor amor q"nque ele puet.
Et amors onq̄s ne se muet.
He? amors ou estu reposte.
Qar ten is si uerras quel oste.
Ont sor toi amene et mis.
Li anemi a tes amis.
Q' sent"iment damors saintimes.
Li anemi sont cil meismes.
Qamors q' nest fause ne feinte.
Est pretieuse chose et sainte.
Ci est amors auugle toute.
Et haine ne reuoit goute.
Qamors deffendre le deust.
Se ele le reconeust.
Q' li uns lautre na desast.
Ne feist rien qui li pesast.
Porce est amors auuglee.
Et desconfite et desuglee.
Qar cil qui conoissent lor droit.
Nes reconoit et si les uoit.
Et haine dire ne set.
Porcoi li uns si lautre het.

Ses uelt fere meillor atort.
Si het li uns lautre de mort.
Naime pas ce poez sauoir.
Lome qui le uodroit auoir.
Honi et qui le uelt destⁿire.
Coⁿnt aor donc Y cure.
Monseignor G son ami.
Oil et il lui autresi.
Si uoudroit me sire G.
Y ocirre de ses mains.
Ou force pis q̄ ie ne di.
Nenil ce uos iur et afi.
Li uns ne uoldroit auoir fet.
A lautre ne honte ne lest.
Porqⁿnque dex a fet por home.
Ne por tout lempire de rome.
Or aige mēti largement.
Qʳ len uoit tot aptement.
Qʳ li uns uet enuair lautre.
La lance leuee sor fautre.
Et uet li uns lautre blecier.
Por lui laidir et corocier.
Qʳ ia de rien ne sen feindra.
Or die de cui se pleindra.
Cil qui des coux aⁿu le pis.
Qⁿnt lautre aⁿu mort et 9q's.
Car sil font tant q'l sentᵉuieignēt.
Gⁿnt poor ai quil ne maītieignēt.
Tant la bataille et la mellee.
Qʳ ele est dune part outree.
Porra Y par reson dire.
Se la soe partie est pire.
Qʳ cil li ait fet lest et honte.
Q' entre ses amis le conte.
Neinz ne lapela p son non.

Et sil auient par auenture.
Qʳ cil li reface le dure.
Ou de q̄ que soit le sormaīt.
Auⁿ il droit se il sempleint.
Nenil quil ne sauⁿ de cui.
Entresloignie se sont andui.
Porce quil ne sentreconoissent.
A lasambler lor lances froissent.
Q' grosses erent et de fresne.
Li uns lautre de riē naresne.
Car se entra resnie se fussent.
Autre assemblee fet eussent.
Ia neust a lor assemblee.
Feru de lance ne despee.
Entre besier et acoler.
Salassent einz qntⁿ foler.
Quil sentⁿ folent et maheignent.
Les espees riens ni gaaignēt.
Ne li hiaume ne li escu.
Qʳ brisie sont et porfendu.
Et des espees li trēchant.
Esgunent et uont rebouchant.
Qⁿr il se donent mltʳ gⁿnz flaz.
Des trēchanz ne mie des plaz.
Et des ponz redonent tex coux.
Sor les nasiaus et sor les coux.
Et sor les fronz et sor les ioes.
Qʳ toutes sont pses et bloes.
La ou li sans casse desouz.
Et les haubʳs ont si derouz.
Et les escuz si despeciez.
Nia celui ne soit bleciez.
Et tant se peinent et trauaillent.
Qⁿ poi aleines ne lor faillent.
Si se combatent .I. chaude.
Qʳ iargonce ne esmeraude.
Not sor les hiaumes a thachiee.
Ne soit fendue et escaschiee.
Car depuis si gⁿnz coux se donent.
Sor les hiaumes q̄ tuit sestonēt.
Et par poi quil ne serceruelent.
Li oeil del chief lor estencelent.
Il ont les poinz qⁿrrez et gros.
Et les ners durs et fors les os.
Si se donēt males gorgiees.
Ace quil tienēt enpoigniees.
Les espees de gⁿnt aie.
Lor font qⁿnt il fierent ahie.

Q"nt g"nt piece se sont lasse.
Tant q̄ li hiaume sont q"sse.
Et li haub'c tuit desmaillie.
Tant ont des espees mailliee.
Li escu sont fendu et frait.
.I. poi se sont arriere t"it.
Si lessent reposer lor ueines.
Et si reprenent lor alaines.
Mais ni font mie g"nt demore.
Einz cort li uns a lautre sore.
Plus fierement q"inz mes ne firent.
Et tuit dient q"inz mes ne uirent.
.II. ch'rs plus corageus.
Ne se combatent mie a geus.
Eincois le font t'stout a certes.
Les m'ites et les desertes.
Ne lor seront iames rendues.
Ces paroles ont entendues.
Li dui home qui sent"folent.
Entendent q̄ les genz polent.
Des .II. serors ent" corder.
Mes ni puent la pes trouer.
Deuers laînee en nule guise.
Mais la maisnee sestoit mise.
Sorce q̄ li rois en diroit.
Ne ia riens nen contrediroit.
Mes lainz nee est trop en rieure.
Q' nes la reine genieure.
Et li ch'r et li rois.
Q' mlt' estoit frans et cortois.
Deuers la mainsnee se tienēt.
Et tuit le roi prier enmeñēt.
Q' maugre leinz nee seror.
Doint de la tr'e a la menor.
La tierce partie ou la q"rte.
Et les .II. ch'rs departe.
Q' trop sont de g"nt nasselage.
Et trop i auroit g"nt domage.
Se li uns de laut' afoloit.
Et point de señor li toloit.
Et li rois dist q̄ de la pes.
Ne sentre metroit il iames.
Q' lainznee seror na cure.
Tant par est male create'.
Toutes ces poles oirent.
Li dui q' les cous sentrefierent.
Si q" touz est si g"nt m'ueille.
Q' la bataille est si pareille.
Q' len ne set en nul auis.
Q' en a le meuz ou le pis.
Mes icil dui q' se ꝺbatent.
Q' par martyre honor achatent.
Se m'ueillent et esbahissent.
Q' si par igal senuaissent.
Q" g"nt m'ueille a chascun uient.
Q' est cil qui si se contient.
Encontre lui si fierement.
Si se combatent longueīnt.
Q' li iorz uers la nuit se f"it.
Et si nia celui qui nait.
Les braz et tout le cors deuât.
Q' li sans touz chauz et boulanz.
Par meins leus par le cors lor bolent.
Et pardesus les hiaumes colent.
Nest m'ueille se il se uelent.
Reposer q̄ formēt se duelent.
Nont plust de la bataille cure.
Q' por leñuit q'lor uient seure.
Et porce q̄ meulz sentredoutent.
Cist dui andoi mlt' se redoutēt.
Et semouent qū pes estoisent.
Mes aincois q̄ dou pre senuoisent.
Si seront bien ent" cointie.
Sau" entreus ioie et pitie.
Me sire Y parla eincois.
Q' mlt' estoit preuz et cortois.
Mes au parler ne le comit.
Ses boens amis ice lormit.
Q'l auoit la parole basse.
Et la uoiz roe et foible et casse.
Qar touz li sans li fu meuz.
Des cous quil auoit receuz.
Sere fet il la nuiz aprouche.
Ie ne cuit blame ne reproche.

Nen auroiz se nuiz nos depart.
Mes ie die de la moie part.
Q' mlt' uos dout et mlt' uos p's.
Nonqs en ma uie nē pris.
Bataille dont tant me dousisse.
Na ch'r qui tant uolsisse.
Conoistre ne cuidai ueoir.
Bien sauez uos coux asseoir.
Et bien les sauez enploier.
Einz ne sot tant de coux poier.
Ch'rs que ie onqs ueisse.
Ia mon ueel tant nē receisse.
Com uos men auez hui p'ste.
Tout mont ūfe cop enteste.
P'foi fet me sire G.
Nestes si estordiz ne ueins.
Q' ie autant ou plus nel soie.
Et se ie uos reconoissoie.
Espoir ne uos greueroit rien.
Se ie uos ai preste le mien.
Bien men auez rendu le conte.
Et dou chatel et de la monte.
Plus estiez haitiez dou rēdre.
Assez q̄ nestoie dou prendre.
Mais coment q̄ la chose preigne.
Q"nt il uos plest q̄ uos apreigne.
Par quel non ie sui apelez.
Iames nons ne uos iert celez.
G. ai non fuiz lou roi lot.
Tantost com me sire Y lot.
Si sesbahist et espert touz.
Par maltalent et par corouz.
Flatist a la terre sespee.
Q' toute estoit ensanglantee.
Et son escu tout despecie.
Et descent dou cheual a pie.
Ha? las fet il q̄l mescheance.
Par trop laide mesconoissance.
Ceste bataille fete auomes.
Quētre coneu ne nos somes.
Q' ia se ie uos coneusse.
A uos 9batuz ne me fusse.
Einz me clamasse recreant.
Deuant le cop iel uos creant.
Coment fet me sire G.
Q' estes uos? ie sui Y.
Q' plus uos aim come dou mōde.
Tant come il dure a la roonde.
Car uos mauez ame touz iorz.
Et honore en toutes corz.
Mes ie uos ueil de cest afaire.
Tele amende et tele honor faire.
Qotreeīnt ueincuz mot°i.
Ice feriez por moi.
Fet me sire G. li douz.
Trop seriez ore estouz.
Se ie ceste amende en p'noie.
Ia certes lamende nert moie.
Car ce ne puet pas auenir.
Ie ne me puis mes sostenir.
Se sui ateinz et formenez.
Certes de neent uos penez.
Ne ie ne di riens por losenge.
Q'l na el monde si estrange.
Q' ie autretant nen deisse.
Eincois q̄ tant des coux sofrisse.
Issi parlant est descenduz.
Sa li uns a lautre renduz.
Ses braz au col si sentrebesent.
Ne de ce mie ne se tesent.
Q' chascuns outre ne se claint.
La chancons onqs ne remaīt.
Tant q̄ li rois et li baron.
Vienent corant tout eīirō.
Si les uoient entresoir.
Et mlt' desirrent a oir.
Q' ce puet estre et q' i sont.
Q' si g"nt ioie sentrefont.
Seignor fet li rois dites nos.
Q' a mis si tost entre uos.
Ceste amitie et ceste acorde.
Q' tel haine et tel descorde.
Ia hui toute ior euc.
Sire ne uos ert pas teue.

Fet mesire G ses nies.
La meschaance et li meschief.
Dont ceste bataille a este.
Desq̄ ci estes areste.
Por loir et por le sauoir.
Bien ert q' uos dira le uoir.
Ie G li ufe nies sui.
Abon ꝙpeignō ne reconui.
Ne mon seignor Y q̄st ci.
Tant q̄ il la soe merci.
Si com deu plot mō enq'st.
Li uns a lautre son nō dist.
Et lors nos entreconeumes.
Q"nt entreꝙbatu nos fumes.
Bien nos somes entrebatu.
Se nos nos fuissions....
Espoir .I. poi plus log̃uem̃t.
Il men alast mlt' malem̃t.
Q' par mō chief il meust mort.
Par la priere et par le tort.
Cele qui mauoit en champ mis.
Mes or ueil melz q̄ mes amis.
Mait outre darmes q̄ tue.
Lors a trestout le sanc mue.
Mes sire Y et si li dist.
Biaus sire c'hiers se dez maist.
Trop auez g"nt tort de ce dire.
Bien set li rois artus me sire.
Q' ie sui de ceste bataille.
Outrez et recreanz sanz faille.
Mais ge mais ge fet cil et cil.
Tant sont andui franc et gentil.
Q' la uictoire et la corone.
Li uns a lautre otroie et done.
Ne cil ne cil ne la uelt p'ndre.
Einz fet chascuns par force entẽdre.
Au roi et a toutes les genz.
Quil est outrez et recreanz.
Mes li rois la tencon depiece.
Q"nt les ot oiz une piece.
Car li oirs mlt' li seoit.
Et ce auec q̄ il ueoit.
Q'l sestrœnt et entf"ole.
Sauoit li uns lautre nau^e.
Et afole en plusors leus.
Seignor fet il entre uos deus.
A g"nt amor biẽ le mostrez.
Mais chascuns dit quil est out^z.
Mes or uos en metez sor moi.
Et ie ramenderai ce croi.
Si bien q̄ ẽnor uos sera.
Et touz siecles men loera.
Lors li ont tuit acreante.
Q' il feront sa uolente.
Tout einseint come il dira.
Et li rois dit quil ptira.
A bien et a foi la q̄rele.
Vez fet il a la damoisele.
Q' sa seror a fors boutee.
De sa t're et deseritee.
Par force et par male m'ci.
Sire fet ele sui reci.
La estes uos uenez donc ca.
Bien le sauoie g"nt pieca.
Q' uos la deseritiez.
Ses droiz nen sera mes naiez.
Car coneu mauez le uoir.
Sa partie par estouoir.
Vos couient toute clam' q'te.
Sire fet ele se iai dite.
Vne parole mee et fole.
Volez me uos prendre a pole.
Pordeu sire ne men greuez.
Vos estes sire si deuez.
Garder de tort et de mesp'ndre.
Por ce fet li rois ueil ie rendre.
A ufe seror sa droiture.
Car ie nai onq̄s de tort cure.
Et uos auez bien entendu.
Qñ mo m'ci se sont rendu.
Vfe ch'rs et li suens.
Ie ne dire pas touz nos boens.
Qñ ufe cort est coneuz.
Chascuns dit quil est encheuz.

Tant uelt li uns lautre ẽnorer.
Ace ne uueil plus demorer.
Desque la chose est sor moi mise.
Car uos feroiz a ma deuise.
Tout qñque ie deuiserai.
Sanz fere tort ou ie dirai.
Q' mes nies est darmes 9quis.
Lors li uaudroit a uſe oespis.
Mes iel dire cont' mon cuer.
Qar il nel deist a nul fuer.
Mes il le dit por essaier.
Se il la porroit apaier.
Q' le rendist a sa seror.
Son heritage par poor.
Quil est apceuz mlt' biẽ.
Q' le ne len rendist ia rien.
Por rien q̃n dire li seust.
Se force ou c'eme ni eust.
Porce q̃le le doute et crient.
Li dist biau sire il couient.
Q' ie fasse uſe talent.
Mes mlt' enai le cuer dolent.
Mes iel fere q̃ quil me g'et.
Saura ma suer ce q̃le quiert.
De sa part de son heritage.
Li doing uos meisme ẽ hostage.
Porce q̃ plus seure en soit.
Reuestez len donc oren droit.
Fet li rois et ele deuieigne.
Vſe fame et de uos la tieigne.
Si lamez come uſe fame.
Et ele uos come sa dame.
Et come sa seror g̃maine.
Li rois a fin la chose meine.
Tant q̃ de sa t're est saisie.
La pucele et si len m'cie.
Et li rois dist a son neueu.
Au ch'r uaillant et preu.
Q' ses armes oster li laist.
Et me sire Y. se li plaist.
Si relaist les soes oster.
Bien sen puent lessier est'.
Lors se desarment li uassal.
Si se desarment par igal.
Et tandis quil se desarmoient.
Le lyon corant uenir uoient.
Q' son seignor q'rant aloit.
Tout meintenãt q̃ il le uoit.
Si comẽca g"nt ioie a fere.
Lors ueissiez genz arierz t're.
Trestouz li plus hardiz senfuit.
Estez fet me sire Y. tuit.
Porcoi fuiez? nus ne uos chace.
Ia ne doutez q̃ mal uos foce.
Li lyons q̃ uenir ueez.
De ce se uos plest me creez.
Quil est a moi et ie a lui.
Si somes 9penignõ andui.
Lors sorent cil trestout deuoir.
Q' orent oi mentenoir.
Les auentures au lyon.
De lui et de son cõpeignon.
Conq̃s ne fu autre quoist.
Sire 9peinz se dex maist.
Vos mauez hui bien escharni.
Mauuesement uos ai meri.
Le seruise q̃ uos feistes.
Dou geant que uos oceistes.
Por mes neuoz et por ma niece.
Mlt' ai a uos pense g"nt piece.
Et porce estoie ie angoisseus.
Q' len disoit qũtre nos deus.
Auoit amor et acointance.
Mlt' i ai pense sanz dotance.
Mes a penser ne me sauoie.
Nonq̃s oi pler nauoie.
De ch'r que ce seusse.
En terre ou este eusse.
Q' li ch'rs au lyon.
Fust apelez nus par son nõ.
Desarme sont issi parlant.
Mes li lyons ne uĩt pas lent.
Vers son seignor la ou il sist.
Q"nt deuant lui fu si li sist.

G^{u}nt ioie come beste mue.
En enfermerie ou en mue.
Les en couient andeus men^{r}.
Car alorplaies rasener.
Ont mestier de mire et dent^{r}t.
Deuant lui men^{r} les enfet.
Li rois qui mlt^{r} chiers les auoit.
.I. cirurgien qui sauoit.
De plaies guerir plus q̄ nus.
Lor fet mander le roi artus.
Et cil de garir se pena.
Tant q̄ lor plaies resana.
Au meuz et au plus tost q'l pot.
Q^{u}nt ambededeus gariz les ot.
Me sire Y. qui sanz retor.
A tout son cors mis en amor.
Vit bien q̄ durer ne porroit.
Mes par amor issi morroit.
Se sa dame nauoit merci.
De lui quil se moroit por lui.
Et pensa quil se partiroit.
Touz seuz de cort et si iroit.
A la fonteine guerroier.
Et si feroit tant foudroier.
Et tant uenter et tant plouoir.
Q^{r} par force et par estouoir.
Li couendra a faire pes.
Ou il ne finera iames.
De la fonteine tormēter.
Et de plouoir et de uenter.
Meintenant q̄ me sire Y.
Senti quil est gariz et sains.
Si sen parti q̄ nus nel sot.
Mes auec lui son lyon ot.
Q^{r} onq̄s en toute sa uie.
Ne uolt^{r} lessier sa compeignie.
Puis errerent tant q̄ il uirent.
La fonteine et plouoir firent.
Ne cuidiez pas q̄ ie uos mēte.
Q^{r} inseint fu fete la tormēte.
Q^{r} nus ne conteroit la disme.
Q'l sembloit q̄ iusqū abismme.
Deust fondre la forest toute.
Et la dame son chastel doute.
Q^{r} il ne fonde touz ensemble.
Li mur croullent et la tor tremble.
Si q̄ par poi q̄le ne u^{r}se.
Melz uolsist estre pris en pse.
Li plus hardiz entre les turs.
Quil fust leenz entre les murs.
Tel poor ont q̄ il maudient.
Trestoutes les honors et dient.
Malooiz soit li p^{r}uuers hon.
Q^{r} fist en cest pais meson.
Et cil qui chastel fond^{r}ent.
Q^{r}n tout le mōde ne t^{o}uerēt.
Leu que len deust tant hair.
Cun seus hom n^{9} puet enuair.
Et touz mater et trauaillier.
Diceste chose conseillier.
Vos couient dame fet lunete.
Ne trouerroiz qui sentremete.
De uos aidier a cest besoig.
Se len ne ua q̄rre mlt^{r} loig.
Ia uoir mes ne reposerons.
En cest chastel ne ne serons.
Les murs de la porte passer.
Q^{r} auroit touz fez amasser.
Vos ch^{r}s por cest afere.
Ne sen oseroit auant trere.
Touz li meudres q̄ uos auez.
Sest ore issint q̄ uos nauez.
Q^{r} deffende ur̄e fonteine.
Si sembleroit fole et uileine.
Mlt^{r} bele eñor i auroir ia.
Q^{u}nt sanz bataille sen ira.
Q^{r} ci uos a si asaillie.
Certes uos estes mal baillie.
Se autreñt de uos ne pēsez.
Tu fait la dame q^{r} tant fez.
Me di coment ien penserai.
Et ie a ton los en ferai.
Dame certes se ie sauoie.
Volentiers uos conseilleroie.

Mes uos auez g"nt mestier.
Dun plus resnable ꝯseill'.
Auec les autres soferre.
Tant se deu plet q̄ ie 'ure.
Aufe cort ancun pdome.
Q' prendra le fes et la some.
De ceste bataille sor lui.
Mes ie ne cuit q̄ ce ne soit hui.
Si en uaudra pis a ufe ues.
Et la dame li respont lues.
Damoisele car parlez del.
Lessiez la gent de mõostel.
Q' n els ne ie nule atendue.
Q' ia par els soit deffendue.
La fonteine ne li prons.
Et se uos plest or i uerrons.
Vfe conseil et ure sen.
Car au besoig touz iorz dit en.
Doit en son ami esprouer.
Dame qui cuid'oit trouer.
Celui qui le geant ocist.
Et les .III. cheualiers conquist.
Il le feroit boen aler qf̄fe.
Mes tant come il a"u la guerre.
Et lire et le coroez sa dame.
Nail souz ciel home ne fame.
Nail souz ciel mien escient.
Iusq̄ il le iurt et fiant.
Quil fera toute sa puissance.
De racorder la mesestance.
Q' sa dame a si g"nt uer lui.
Q'l ẽmuert de duel et dẽnui.
Et la dame dist ie sui preste.
Einz q̄ uos ent°iez en la q̄ste.
Q' ie uos pleuisse ma foi.
Et ge irai sil uient a foi.
Q' ie sanz faille et sanz feintise.
Li fere tout a sa deuise.
Sa pes se ie fere la puis.
Dame de ce ne doutez rien.
Q' uos ne la puissiez mlt' bien.
Sa pes fere se il uos siet.
Mais dou serement ne uos g'et.
Q' ie le prendre toute uoie.
Einz q̄ ie me mete a la uoie.
Ce fet la dame ne me poise.
Lunete q' mlt' fu cortoise.
Li fist tont meĩtenant fors t"ire.
.I. mlt' pretieus saintuaire.
Et la dame a genouz sest mise.
Au geu de ui'te la prise.
Lunete mlt' cortoisement.
A escheuir le serement.
Rien de son preu ni oublia.
Cele qui escheui li a.
Dame fet el hauciez la main.
Mais ne ueil pas q" pres demai.
Me metoiz sus ne ce ne quoi.
Car nos nen fetes riens por moi.
Por uos meismes le feroiz.
Et sil uos plest si iureroiz.
Por le ch'r au lyon.
Qs en boẽne entẽtion.
Vos peneroiz tant quil sau".
Si q̄ lamor so dame aura.
Ausi bien come il lot onq̄s.
Sa main destre hauca adonq̄s.
La dame et dist tout autresi.
Com tu las dit et ie le di.
Issi meist dex et cist saint.
Q' ia mes cuert ne sera feinz.
Q' ie tout mõ pooir nen face.
Lamor li rendrai et la grace.
Q' il selt a sa dame auoir.
Se ien ai force et pooir.
Or a bien lunete esploitie.
De ce nauoit tel conoitie.
Come de ce quel nauoit fet.
Ia ert amende le forfet.

NOTE ON THE FOREST OF BRECELIANDE,

AND THE

FOUNTAIN OF BARANTON.

The Forest of Brécéliande in Brittany, the scene of the leading incident in the Chevalier au Lion, has ever been one the most favoured haunts of Romance, and one whose marvels the Trouveurs have most delighted to celebrate. Amongst those whose names have contributed to add to the renown of this remarkable spot, is the mighty Enchanter Merlin, whose prison it became through the artifices of his Lady love. The manner of his being incarcerated there, is very circumstantially detailed in the Romance which bears his name, as quoted by Mr. Southey, in his Preface to Morte d'Arthur.

Merlin, having become enamoured of the fair Viviane,* was weak enough to impart to her various important secrets of his art,† being

* This Viviane is said to be the daughter of a Vavasour of high lineage, called Dyonas, from Dyane, a Goddess of the sea. He married a niece of the Duchess of Burgundy, with whom he received as a dowry, half the Forest of Briogne; the other half was granted him soon after in reward for his good services. Under the title of the "Lady of the Lake" Viviane is well known.

† Of the nature and extent of the powers with which Merlin was endowed, Spenser has left us a most marvellous account.

"For he by wordes could call out of the sky
Both sunne and moone, and make them him obay;
The land to sea, and sea to maineland dry,
And darksom night he eke could turne to day;
Huge hostes of men he could alone dismay,
And hostes of men of meanest thinges could frame,
Whenso him list his enimies to fray:
That to this day, for terror of his fame,
The feendes do quake when any him to them does name."

Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3. st. xii.

What wonder is it then that he should elsewhere characterize him as the being "Which whylome did excell

All living wightes in might of magicke spell."

Ibid, b. i. c. 7. st. xxxvi.

impelled by a fatal destiny, of which he was at the same time fully aware. The Lady, however, was not content with his devotion, unbounded as it seems to have been, but "cast about," as the Romance tells us, how she might "detain him for evermore," and with a view of learning some mode of accomplishing this object, she one day addressed him in these terms,—"Sir," said she, "I would have you teach and shew me how to enclose and imprison a man without a tower, without walls, without chains, but by enchantment alone, in such manner that he may never be able to go out, except by me." Aware of her design, Merlin shook his head, and evinced great reluctance to comply with her request. But Viviane, "for her great treason," began to fawn and to flatter him, and used many subtle arguments to prove that he ought to perform her will, whatever it might be. So at last he said to her, "Certes, lady, yes, and I will do it; tell me what you would have. Sir, said she, I would that we should make a fair place and a suitable, so contrived by art and by cunning, that it might never be undone, and that you and I should be there in joy and in solace. My lady, said Merlin, I will perform all this. Sir, said she, I would not have you do it, but you shall teach me, and I will do it, and then it will be more to my will. I grant you this, said Merlin. Then he began to devise, and the damsel put it all in writing. And when he had devised the whole, then had the damsel full great joy, and shewed him greater semblance of loving him than she had ever before made; and they sojourned together a long while. At length it fell out that as they were going one day hand in hand through the forest of Broceliande, they found a bush of white thorn which was laden with flowers; and they seated themselves under the shade of this white thorn upon the green grass, and they disported together and took their solace, and Merlin laid his head upon the damsel's lap, and then she began to feel if he were asleep. Then the damsel rose and made a ring with her wimple round the bush and round Merlin, and began her enchantments such as he himself had taught her; and nine times she made the ring, and nine times she made the enchantment; and then she went and sate down by him, and placed his head again upon her lap; and when he awoke, and looked round him, it seemed to him that he was inclosed in the strongest tower in the world, and laid upon a fair bed; then said he to the dame, My lady, you have deceived me unless you abide with me, for no one hath power to unmake this tower, save you alone." She then promised she would be often there, and we are told that in this she held her covenant to him. "And Merlin never went out of that tower where his mistress Viviane had inclosed him. But she entered and went out again when she listed; and often time she regretted what she had done, for she had thought that the thing which he taught her could not be true, and willingly would she have let him out if she could." T. 2. f. 134.

From the same authority, it appears that after this event Merlin was never more known to hold converse with any mortal but Viviane, except on one occasion. Arthur having for some time missed him from his Court, sent several of his Knights in search of him, and among the number Sir Gawain, who met with a very unpleasant adventure while engaged in this quest. Happening to pass a damsel on his road, as he journeyed along, and neglecting to salute her, she revenged herself for his incivility, by transforming him into a hideous dwarf. He was bewailing aloud his evil fortune as he went through the Forest of Brécéliande, when "suddenly he heard the voice of one groaning on his right hand;" and "looking that way he could see nothing save a kind of smoke which seemed like air, and through which he could not pass." Merlin then addressed him from out the smoke, and told him by what misadventure he was imprisoned there. "Ah, Sir," he added, "you will never see me more, and that grieves me, but I cannot remedy it; and when you shall have departed from this place, I shall never more speak to you, nor to any other person, save only my mistress." And after this he comforted Gawain under his transformation, assuring him that he should speedily be disenchanted, and he predicted to him that he should find the King at Carduel, in Wales, on his return, and that all the other Knights who had been on the like quest, would arrive there the same day as himself. And all this came to pass as Merlin had said. T. 2. f. 146.*

* Preface—Morte d'Arthur, xliii—xlviii.

In the "Prophecies of Merlin," though the result is the same, the circumstances attending his disappearance are differently related. There the scene is laid, not in Brécéliande, but in the Forest of Arvantes, and Merlin's living sepulchre is not a white thorn bush, but a tomb which he had constructed for himself, and which Viviane

It is evident that the wonders ascribed by Chrestien de Troyes to the Fountain of Baranton, in this famous Forest, were not the creation of his own fancy, but were in his time already in no small repute; for we find his precursor Wace so much impressed with the desire to be an eyewitness of them, that he actually made a journey to the spot for that purpose. In his Roman de Rou he relates the whole affair with admirable naiveté. After adverting to the marvels of the slab, he tells us, that if what the Bretons say is true, Fairies are often to be seen sporting on the Fountain's bank; but he very frankly owns that he met with nothing but disappointment to repay the trouble of his expedition, and he reproaches himself for his folly in having ever undertaken it.

The passage is brought in by the mention of the Barons who accompanied William of Normandy to the conquest of England, some of whom he says were persuaded him to lie down in, under pretence of trying whether it would be large enough for her to be buried in it with him. As soon as he had entered it, Viviane put down the lid, and closed it so effectually, by arts which he himself had taught her, that it never after could be opened.—See Morte d'Arthur. ii. 463—8.

It is this version that Ariosto appears to have followed; but he places in the South of France, somewhere in the neighbourhood of the Garonne, the tomb in which Col corpo morto il vivo spirto alberga.

Huon de Mery, a subsequent trouveur, set out on a similar errand, and was either more fortunate, or less ingenuous than Wace. One cannot help suspecting him of reckoning rather largely upon the credulity of his readers, in the narrative he gives of his journey; however, he shall tell his story in his own words.

Being one of those who accompanied an expedition made by the "Rois Loeys en Bretaingne," he considered the opportunity thus afforded him of visiting its Forest of wonders too tempting to be overlooked.

No. 541. S. F. (fol. 72. col. 2, v. 5.)

The Fairies, who are reported to haunt the Forest of Brécéliande, appear to have patronized children in an especial manner, and to have delighted in showering down gifts upon such as were brought there soon after their birth to receive their benediction. There is extant in the Bibliothéque du Roi, (MS. du Roi, n. 7989—4. Bal.) a fragment of a curious Romance, named Brun de la Montagne, which is founded entirely upon this circumstance. It is printed in Le Roux de Lincy's Livre des Legendes. The outline of the story is as follows,—

Butor de la Montagne, on the birth of his infant son, is desirous that he should receive a Fairy's blessing; and after revolving in his mind the names of all the "lieux faës"† with which he is acquainted, he determines on sending him to the haunt of the Fairies in the "bois Bersillant." The little Brun is accordingly conveyed thither by a trusty Knight, and placed on the margin of the enchanted fountain. It is not long before the Fairies* appear, and the child is endowed with the choicest gifts which they have in their power to bestow. One of them, however, envious of the extreme brightness of his prospects, dooms him to misfortune and disappointment in love.

On his return to his parents, one of the benevolent Fairies, who had taken a particular liking to him, disguises herself, and becomes his nurse. The MS. breaks off abruptly just as the story of his disastrous love-adventure is about to commence.†

I shall conclude this Note with a description of the present state of the famous Forest of Brécéliande, from an account of a visit lately made to it by the Cte. de la Villemarqué, and published by him in the Revue de Paris for May, 1837.

"J'avais tant de fois, dans mon enfance, entendu parler de Merlin, et lu, dans nos romans de chevalerie bretonne, de si merveilleuses choses sur son tombeau, la forêt de Brécilien, la fontaine de Baranton, et la vallée de Concoret, que je fus pris d'un vif désir de visiter ces lieux, et qu'un beau matin je partis.

"Ploërmel est la ville la plus voisine de Concoret; de là au bourg la route est longue et difficile; toujours des chemins creux, des montagnes, des bois, ou des landes sans fin.

* * * * * * * * *

* The following is the description given of these Ladies in the Romance,—

"Les dames dont je dï si estoient faées
Qui si très noblement estoient asesmées.
Leur cors furent plus blanc que n'est noif sor gelée,
Et si très chierement estoient atournées,
Car de couronnes d'or furent toutes dorées
Et de blans dras de soie estoient nournées;
Enmi de la portrine estoient escollées.
Se uns hom en eust erré .lj. .c. mile journées
Ne fussent point par li trois plus belles trouvées, Et s'éust conversé en cent mile contrées."

Liv: des Leg: 267—8.

† Ibid, 260, 284.

"La plaine qu'on appelle en breton Concoret,* et dans les romans du moyen-âge le Val-des-Fées, est un immense amphithéâtre couronné de bois sombres, jadis nommés Broch'allean,† aujourd'hui par corruption, Brécilien. A l'une de ses extrémités, coule une fontaine près de laquelle on voit deux pierres couvertes de mousse que domine une vielle croix de bois vermoulue; c'est la fontaine de Barandon et le tombeau de Merlin; là dort, dit-on, le vieux druide, au murmure des eaux et du vent qui gémit dans les bruyères d'alentour.

"De cette hauteur, l'œil embrasse toute la vallée, et un horizon sans bornes de bois, de champs remplis de blés ou de genets aux fleurs jaunes, de paroisses et de lointains clochers.

"Brécilien était une de ces forêts sacrées qu'habitaient les prêtresses du druidisme dans les Gaules; son nom et celui de sa vallée l'attesteraient à défaut d'autre témoignage; les noms de lieux sont les plus sûrs garans des évènemens passés."

All the old traditions which give an interest to the Forest, continue to be current there. The Fairies who are kind to children, are still reported to be seen in their white apparel upon the banks of the Fountain; and the Fountain itself, (whose waters are now considered salubrious,) is still said to be possessed of its marvellous rain-producing properties. In seasons of drought, the inhabitants of the surrounding parishes go to it in procession, headed by their five great banners, and their priests, ringing bells, and chaunting Psalms. On arriving at the Fountain, the Rector of the Canton dips the foot of the Cross into its waters, and it is sure to rain before a week elapses.

The Fountain of Baranton is supplied by a mineral spring, and it bubbles up on a piece of iron or copper being thrown into it.

"Les enfans s'amusent à y jeter des épingles, et disent par commun proverbe: 'Ris donc, fontaine de Berendon, et je te donnerai une épingle.'"‡ ‡ Revue de Paris. Tome 41. 7 Mai. 1837. pp. 47—58. article "Visite au Tombeau de Merlin," par Théodore de la Villemarqué.

I must here again express my acknowledgement to this Gentleman, for transcribing the "Chevalier au Lion" for me from the MS. at Paris; and also for his kindness in correcting the Press of that part of it, which occupies from p. 160 to 214. As he was not in England when the former part of the Romance was printed, that portion of the work had not the same advantage, and to this circumstance must be ascribed any errors of impression which may appear in it.

LLYN DULYN IN SNOWDON.

The extraordinary property of producing rain, when spilt upon a stone, is attributed to the waters of Llyn Dulyn in Snowdon, according to the following account, which is translated from the Greal, a Welsh Magazine, published in London, 1805.

"There is a lake in the mountains of Snowdon, called Dulyn, in a rugged valley, encircled by high steep rocks. This lake is extremely black, and its fish are deformed and unsightly, having large heads and small bodies. No wild swans are ever seen alighting upon it, (such as are on all the other lakes of Snowdon,) nor ducks, nor any bird whatever. And there is a causeway of stones leading into this lake; and if any one goes along this causeway, even when it is hot sunshine, and throws water so as to wet the furthest stone, which is called the Red Altar, [yr Allawr Goch,] it is a chance if it do not rain before night. Witness, T. Prys, of Plas Iolyn, and Sion Davydd, of Rhiwlas, in Llan Silin."

GERMAN VERSIONS OF SIR YWAINE.

HARTMANN VON DER AUE'S POEM.

The story of Owain, or Sir Ywaine, was also very popular with the Germans in the middle ages, and was versified by Hartmann Von der Aue, whom Adelung tells us, was one of the Meister Sänger, of the latter part of the 12th, or the beginning of the 13th Century. Many copies of his Poem are extant; and one which exists in the Library of the Vatican is considered by Tieck to be the oldest German MS. preserved there. The composition has already appeared more than once in print. It is to be found in Professor Miller's collection of Teutonic Romances, 2 Vols. 4to. 1784. Michaeler, who published it in four small 8vo Volumes, Vienna, 1786, made his transcript chiefly from a MS. of 1517, which was formerly kept at the Castle of Ambras, near Inspruck, but is now in the Imperial Library at Vienna. The Poem is in his edition divided into twelve songs; in that of Benecke and Lachman, 8vo., Berlin, 1827, it extends to 8165 lines, and transcripts are given from various MSS. for the sake of rendering it the more interesting to the philological student. As Hartmann's Poem agrees almost in every respect with the Chevalier au Lion of Chrestien de Troyes, not only as regards the detail of their several incidents, but even in the very turn of expression, it is unnecessary to enter upon an analysis of it in this place.* The only difference that occurs between them is,

* The story of a lion being rescued from a dragon, (lindenworm,) and proving his gratitude by his subseqnent attachment to his deliverer, is the subject of the Danish ballad of King Tidrich, the Dietrich of Bern of the Nibelungen Lay. A Metrical Translation of this ballad will be found in "Illustrations of Northern Antiquities," 4to. Edinburgh, 1814. A similar adventure is detailed in the Morte d'Arthur, as having befallen Sir Percival de Galles, the Peredur ab Evrawc of Welsh Romance, while engaged in the quest of the Sangreal. He came one day into a valley where a lion was fighting with a serpent which had carried off one of his whelps. "Syr Percyual thoughte to helpe the lyon for he was the more naturel beeste, of the two, and there with he drewe his suerd, and sette hys shelde afore hym, and ther he gaf the serpent suche a buffet that he had in some of the proper names. Thus, the "Forest of Bressilian" is sometimes also called "Breysgau in the Wood;" the fountain is named Asthalun, and King Atzelon is the title bestowed on the opponent Sir Ywaine meets with there.* By an easy transition, Cardueil and Chester, where Arthur held his Court, are rendered into Caridol and Cariodol. It is singular that, according to the German version, Sir Gawain, in his argument to induce his cousin Ywaine to leave his bride, and engage in martial pursuits, warns him against falling into the errors of Sir Ereck,† the Geraint ab Erbin of the Mabinogion, whose domestic seclusion caused him to lose the reputation for valour which he had once enjoyed—and the young Lady whom Ywaine finds engaged in reading a Romance to her Father and Mother, is said to have been particularly fluent in Welsh, a term applied by the Germans to foreign languages in general, and in this instance probably used to designate Norman French.

In Von der Hagen's and Büsching's Bibliographical Outline of the History of German Poetry, (Literariſcher Grundriſs zur Geſchichte der Deutſchen Poeſie: 8vo. Berlin, 1812,) there occurs a notice of a copy of Hartmann Von der Aue's or Ouwe's Poem, then in the University Library at Rostock, which differs in some curious particulars from the printed versions.

After stating at the commencement, that the author's name was Hartmann, the MS. proceeds to say that he brought the story into Germany from England, where he had resided a long time, and where he had seen it in Books written in a foreign language, (Welſchen büchen.)

Der bracht diſe mȩre
Zů Tiſch (Tütſch) als ich hān vernom̄en
Da er uſz Engellandt was kom̄en
Da er uil zit was geweſen
Hat ers an den Welſchen büchen geleſen.

a dedely wound." The lion grateful for the service he had done him, fawned upon him "as a spanyel," and having conveyed his whelp in safety to his lair, returned to Sir Percival, and followed him. B. xiv. c. 6.

* I find that in some of the old Welsh Pedigrees, Owain ap Urien is styled "Iarll y Ffynnawn," the Earl of the Fountain.

† Of Hartmann's Poem, on the adventures of this hero, notice will be taken hereafter.

ULRICH'S YWAINE.

One Ulrich, supposed to have been Ulrich Turkheim, who lived two centuries later than Hartmann, has also left a Poem on the subject of Ywaine, for the materials of which he has evidently had recourse to the same sources as his predecessor. Ulrich, however, is less diffuse; he, altogether, omits some of the trifling incidents, and has some variations in his mode of spelling the proper names. For instance, he makes no mention of Calogriant's hospitable entertainment at the Castle, on his way to the fountain, where there is neither fine weather, nor a concert of singing birds previous to the combat; neither does he relate the circumstance of the dead knight being brought into the chamber where Ywaine is, and his wounds beginning to bleed afresh. There are some slight differences in the account of Sir Gawain's encounter with Sir Meliogans, when he rescues Arthur's Queen from that knight's power; and Ywaine's adventure at the Chastel de pesme auenture, where he finds the three hundred captive ladies, is very lightly passed over. Arthur, and all the knights of the Round Table, are, however, represented as journeying to Asthalun, to celebrate his return thither, and his reconciliation with his wife. Bretagne is also frequently alluded to in Ulrich's Poem; he speaks of Nantes, and places "Brezilien" near the river Presle.

SCANDINAVIAN VERSIONS OF YWAINE.

Having thus far traced the Romance of Sir Ywaine through the languages of Wales, France, England, and Germany, it now remains to shew that the popularity which this extraordinary tale enjoyed, was not confined to these nations, but extended to the remotest recesses of the North. It was introduced, as Professor Nyerup tells us,* "into Scandinavia in King Hakon Hakonson's time. He had it translated into Norse. It, at present, exists in the Icelandic, the Swedish, and the Danish dialects. In the two latter, it was versified at the instance of Queen Euphemia; but in the Icelandic, it remains in prose, just as King Hakon had it translated. The whole of these compositions are only in MS."

DANISH VERSION OF YWAINE.

"The Danish MS. of Ivain was once in Peter Syv's Library; it afterward passed into that of Rostgaard; and in the catalogue of his Books, published in the year 1726, it is mentioned at page 536, under No. 920, as follows, 'Om Hr. Iwan et meget gammelt Manuscript paa dansk Vers,' (of Sir Iwan, a very old Manuscript in Danish verse.) What became of it afterwards, I have not been able to learn; but I suppose that it is one of the two in the Royal Library at Stockholm."

* Almindelig Morskabslaesning i Danmark og Norge, p. 123—5.

King Hakon evinced great partiality to our old Romances, for that of Tristram and Isoud was also translated into Norse, at his command, by the monk Robert, in 1226. Ibid, p. 120.

SWEDISH VERSION OF YWAINE.

"In the same Library the Swedish Ivain is preserved. It was first made known to the learned world in Stjernman's 'Tal om Vetenskåpernes Tilstånd i Svearike under Hedendoms-och Påfvedoms-tiden.' (Oration on the State of the Sciences in Sweden in the times of Heathendom and the Papacy,) page 73, and Fant afterwards noticed it in his 'Observationes selectæ historiam Svecanam illustrantes. Particula I. Upsal, 1785.' The Swedish Ivain is in verse, and ends thus,—

Tha tusind Vintrar thryhundrad Ar
Frân Gudz Fôdzlo lidhin var
Och ther til try, i then ſama Tima
Eufemia Drotning, that maghin Z troo,
Lât theſſa Bokena wânda ſwo
Aff wâlſka Tungo oc a wart Mâl.
Gud nadhe the âdla Frughe Sjâl
Ther Drotning ôfver Norge var
Medh Gudz Miskundh i trâttan Ar'

Which signifies, that "in the year 1303, Queen Euphemia caused this book to be translated from the southern tongue into our own. This lady was, by the grace of God, Queen of Norway for thirteen years."

"Fant remarks expressly, that this must be understood to mean that she had it translated into the Norse, and that afterwards it was translated from Norse into Swedish. (Compare Von der Hagen's and Büsching's Museum, II. 328.)"

ICELANDIC VERSION OF YWAINE.

IVENT SAGA.

Of the Icelandic version, entitled Ivent Saga, Nyerup goes on to say, that it is to be found among the Arnæmagnæan MSS. in the University Library of Copenhagen, under No. 181, ª in folio, and No. 588, ª in 4to. He gives several short extracts from it, of which the concluding one is as follows,—

"Og likur hier Sögu af Herra Jventi, er Hakon Konungur hinn gamli liet snua ur frönsku Tungumali i norrœnu."

"And here ends the story of Sir Ivain, that King Hakon the Old caused to be translated from the French tongue into the Norse."

The same information is given at the end of two copies of this Saga in the British Museum, (Sloane MSS. 4857, and 4859,) which are also in prose, and vary very slightly from each other; and which, from the extracts given by Nyerup, appear to differ only in their orthography from the MSS. in the Copenhagen Library. Facsimiles of the MSS. in the British Museum are annexed. They are both written on paper, and that marked 4859 is dated at the end "Endud anno 1693 than 22 Decembris."

PEREDUR THE SON OF EVRAWC.

Earl Evrawc owned the Earldom of the North. And he had seven sons. And Evrawc maintained himself not so much by his own possessions as by attending tournaments, and wars, and combats. And, as it often befalls those who join in encounters and wars, he was slain, and six of his sons likewise. Now the name of his seventh son was Peredur, and he was the youngest of them. And he was not of an age to go to wars and encounters, otherwise he might have been slain as well as his father and brothers. His mother was a scheming and thoughtful woman, and she was very solicitous concerning this her only son and his possessions. So she took counsel with herself to leave the inhabitated country, and to flee to the deserts and unfrequented wildernesses. And she permitted none to bear her company thither but women and boys, and spiritless men, who were both unaccustomed and unequal to war and fighting. And none dared to bring either horses or arms where her son was, lest he should set his mind upon them. And the youth went daily to divert himself in the forest, by flinging sticks and staves. And one day he saw his mother's flock of goats, and near the goats two hinds were standing. And he marvelled greatly that these two should be without horns, while the others had them. And he thought they had long run wild, and on that account they had lost their horns. And by activity and swiftness of foot, he drove the hinds and the goats together into the house which there was for the goats at the extremity of the forest. Then Peredur returned to his mother. "Ah, mother," said he, "a marvellous thing have I seen in the wood; two of thy goats have run wild, and lost their horns; through their having been so long missing in the wood. And no man had ever more trouble than I had to drive them in." Then they all arose and went to see. And when they beheld the hinds, they were greatly astonished.

And one day they saw three knights coming along the horseroad on the boarders of the forest. And the three knights were Gwalchmai the son of Gwyar, and Geneir Gwystyl, and Owain the son of Urien. And Owain kept on the track of the knight who had divided the apples in Arthur's Court, whom they were in pursuit of. "Mother," said Peredur, "what are those yonder?" "They are angels, my son," said she. "By my faith," said Peredur, "I will go and become an angel with them." And Peredur went to the road, and met them. "Tell me, good soul," said Owain, "sawest thou a knight pass this way, either to-day or yesterday?" "I know not," answered he, "what a knight is." "Such an one as I am," said Owain. "If thou wilt tell me what I ask thee, I will tell thee that which thou askest me." "Gladly will I do so," replied Owain. "What is this?" demanded Peredur, concerning the saddle. "It is a saddle," said Owain. Then he asked about all the accoutrements which he saw upon the men, and the horses, and the arms, and what they were for, and how they were used. And Owain shewed him all these things fully, and told him what use was made of them. "Go forward," said Peredur, "for I saw such an one as thou enquirest for, and I will follow thee."

Then Peredur returned to his mother and her company, and he said to her, "Mother, those were not angels, but honourable knights." Then his mother swooned away. And Peredur went to the place where they kept the horses that carried firewood, and that brought meat and drink from the inhabited country to the desert. And he took a bony piebald horse, which seemed to him the strongest of them. And he pressed a pack into the form of a saddle, and with twisted twigs he imitated the trappings which he had seen upon the horses. And when Peredur came again to his mother, the Countess had recovered from her swoon. "My son," said she, "desirest thou to ride forth?" "Yes, with thy leave," said he. "Wait, then, that I may counsel thee before thou goest." "Willingly," he answered, "speak quickly." "Go forward," then she said, "to the court of Arthur, where there are the best, and the boldest, and the most bountiful of men. And wherever thou seest a church, repeat there thy Paternoster unto it. And if thou see meat and drink, and hast need of them, and none have the kindness or the courtesy to give them to thee, take them thyself. If thou hear an outcry, proceed towards it, especially if it be the outcry of a woman. If thou see a fair jewel, possess thyself of it, and give it to another, for thus thou shalt obtain praise. If thou see a fair woman, pay thy court to her, whether she will or no; for thus thou wilt render thyself a better and more esteemed man than thou wast before."

After this discourse, Peredur mounted the horse, and taking a handful of sharp pointed forks in his hand, he rode forth. And he journeyed two days and two nights in the woody wildernesses, and in desert places, without food and without drink. And then he came to a vast wild wood, and far within the wood he saw a fair even glade, and in the glade he saw a tent, and seeming to him to be a church, he repeated his Paternoster to the tent. And he went towards it, and the door of the tent was open. And a golden chair was near the door. And on the chair sat a lovely auburn-haired maiden, with a golden frontlet on her forehead, and sparkling stones in the frontlet, and with a large gold ring on her hand. And Peredur dismounted, and entered the tent. And the maiden was glad at his coming, and bad him welcome. At the entrance of the tent he saw food, and two flasks full of wine, and two loaves of fine wheaten flour, and collops of the flesh of the wild boar. "My mother told me," said Peredur, "wheresoever I saw meat and drink, to take it." "Take the meat and welcome, chieftain," said she. So Peredur took half of the meat and of the liquor himself, and left the rest to the maiden. And when Peredur had finished eating, he bent upon his knee before the maiden. "My mother," said he, "told me, wheresoever I saw a fair jewel, to take it." "Do so, my soul," said she. So Peredur took the ring. And he mounted his horse, and proceeded on his journey.

After this, behold the knight came, to whom the tent belonged; and he was the Lord of the Glade. And he saw the track of the horse, and he said to the maiden, "Tell me who has been here since I departed." "A man," said she, "of wonderful demeanour." And she described to him what Peredur's appearance and conduct had been. "Tell me," said he, "did he offer thee any wrong?" "No," answered the maiden, "by my faith, he harmed me not." "By my faith, I do not believe thee; and until I can meet with him, and revenge the insult he has done me, and wreak my vengeance upon him, thou shalt not remain two nights in the same house." And the knight arose, and set forth to seek Peredur.

Meanwhile Peredur journeyed on towards Arthur's Court. And before he reached it, another knight had been there, who gave a ring of thick gold at the door of the gate for holding his horse, and went into the Hall where Arthur and his household, and Gwenhwyvar and her maidens, were assembled. And the page of the chamber was serving Gwenhwyvar with a golden goblet. Then the knight dashed the liquor that was therein upon her face, and upon her stomacher, and gave her a violent blow on the face, and said, "If any have the boldness to dispute this goblet with me, and to revenge the insult to Gwenhwyvar, let him follow me to the meadow, and there I will await him." So the knight took his horse, and rode to the meadow. And all the household hung down their heads, lest any of them should be requested to go and avenge the insult to Gwenhwyvar. For it seemed to them, that no one would have ventured on so daring an outrage, unless he possessed such powers, through magic or charms, that none could be able to take vengeance upon him. Then, behold Peredur entered the Hall, upon the bony piebald horse, with the uncouth trappings upon it; and in this way he traversed the whole length of the Hall. In the centre of the Hall stood Kai. "Tell me, tall man," said Peredur, "is that Arthur, yonder?" "What wouldest thou with Arthur?" asked Kai. "My mother told me to go to Arthur, and receive the honour of knighthood." "By my faith," said he, "thou art all too meanly equipped with horse and with arms." Thereupon he was perceived by all the household, and they threw sticks at him. Then, behold, a dwarf came forward. He had already been a year at Arthur's Court, both he and a female dwarf. They had craved harbourage of Arthur, and had obtained it; and during the whole year, neither of them had spoken a single word to any one. When the dwarf beheld Peredur, "Haha!" said he, "the welcome of Heaven be unto thee, goodly Peredur, son of Evrawc, the chief of warriors, and flower of knighthood." "Truly," said Kai, "thou art ill-taught to remain a year mute at Arthur's Court, with choice of society; and now, before the face of Arthur and all his household, to call out, and declare such a man as this the chief of warriors, and the flower of knighthood." And he gave him such a box on the ear, that he fell senseless to the ground. Then exclaimed the female dwarf, "Haha! goodly Peredur, son of Evrawc; the welcome of Heaven be unto thee, flower of knights, and light of chivalry." "Of a truth, maiden," said Kai, "thou art ill-bred to remain mute for a year at the Court of Arthur, and then to speak as thou dost of such a man as this." And Kai kicked her with his foot, so that she fell to the ground senseless. "Tall man," said Peredur, "shew me which is Arthur." "Hold thy peace," said Kai, "and go after the knight who went hence to the meadow, and take from him the goblet, and overthrow him, and possess thyself of his horse and arms, and then thou shalt receive the order of knighthood." "I will do so, tall man," said Peredur. So he turned his horse's head towards the meadow. And when he came there, the knight was riding up and down, proud of his strength, and valour, and noble mien. "Tell me," said the knight, "didst thou see any one coming after me from the Court?" "The tall man that was there," said he, "desired me to come, and overthrow thee, and to take from thee the goblet, and thy horse and thy armour for myself." "Silence," said the knight, "go back to the Court, and tell Arthur, from me, either to come himself, or to send some other to fight with me; and unless he do so quickly, I will not wait for him." "By my faith," said Peredur, "choose thou whether it shall be willingly or unwillingly, but I will have the horse, and the arms, and the goblet." And upon this the knight ran at him furiously, and struck him a violent blow with the shaft of his spear, between the neck and the shoulder. "Haha! lad," said Peredur, "my mother's servants were not used to play with me in this wise; therefore, thus will I play with thee." And thereupon he struck him with a sharp pointed fork, and it hit him in the eye, and came out at the back of his neck, so that he instantly fell down lifeless.

"Verily," said Owain the son of Urien to Kai, "thou wert ill-advised, when thou didst send that madman after the knight. For one of two things must befall him. He must either be overthrown, or slain. If he is overthrown by the knight, he will be counted by him to be an honourable person of the Court, and an eternal disgrace will it be to Arthur and his warriors. And if he is slain, the disgrace will be the same, and moreover, his sin will be upon him; therefore will I go to see what has befallen him." So Owain went to the meadow, and he found Peredur dragging the man about. "What art thou doing thus," said Owain. "This iron coat," said Peredur, "will never come from off him; not by my efforts, at any rate." And Owain unfastened his armour and his clothes. "Here, my good soul," said he, "is a horse and armour better than thine. Take them joyfully, and come with me to Arthur, to receive the order of knighthood, for thou dost merit it." "May I never shew my face again, if I go," said Peredur, "but take thou the goblet to Gwenhwyvar, and tell Arthur, that wherever I am, I will be his vassal, and will do him what profit and service I am able. And say that I will not come to his Court, until I have encountered the tall man that is there, to revenge the injury he did to the dwarf and dwarfess." And Owain went back to the Court, and related all these things to Arthur and Gwenhwyvar, and to all the household.

And Peredur rode forward. And as he proceeded, behold a knight met him. "Whence comest thou?" said the knight. "I come from Arthur's Court," said Peredur. "Art thou one of his men?" asked he. "Yes, by my faith," he answered. "A good service, truly, is that of Arthur." "Wherefore sayest thou so," said Peredur. "I will tell thee," said he, "I have always been Arthur's enemy, and all such of his men as I have ever encountered, I have slain." And without further parlance, they fought, and it was not long before Peredur brought him to the ground, over his horse's crupper. Then the knight besought his mercy. "Mercy thou shalt have," said Peredur, "if thou wilt make oath to me, that thou wilt go to Arthur's Court, and tell him that it was I that overthrew thee, for the honour of his service; and say, that I will never come to the Court, until I have avenged the insult offered to the dwarf and dwarfess." The knight pledged him his faith of this, and proceeded to the Court of Arthur, and said as he had promised, and conveyed the threat to Kai.

And Peredur rode forward. And within that week he encountered sixteen knights, and overthrew them all shamefully. And they all went to Arthur's Court, taking with them the same message which the first knight had conveyed from Peredur, and the same threat which he had sent to Kai. And thereupon Kai was reproved by Arthur; and Kai was greatly grieved thereat.

And Peredur rode forward. And he came to a vast and desert wood, on the confines of which was a lake. And on the other side was a fair castle. And on the border of the lake he saw a venerable hoary headed man sitting upon a velvet cushion, and having a garment of velvet upon him. And his attendants were fishing in the lake. When the hoary headed man beheld Peredur approaching, he arose, and went towards the castle. And the old man was lame. Peredur rode to the palace, and the door was open, and he entered the hall. And there was the hoary headed man sitting on a cushion, and a large blazing fire burning before him. And the household and the company arose to meet Peredur, and disarrayed him. And the man asked the youth to sit on the cushion; and they sat down, and conversed together. When it was time, the tables were laid, and they went to meat. And when they had finished their meal, the man enquired of Peredur, if he knew well how to fight with the sword. "I know not," said Peredur, "but were I to be taught, doubtless I should." "Whoever can play well with the cudgel and shield, will also be able to fight with a sword." And the man had two sons; the one had yellow hair, and the other auburn. "Arise, youths," said he, "and play with the cudgel and the shield." And so did they. "Tell me, my soul," said the man, "which of the youths thinkest thou plays best." "I think," said Peredur, "that the yellow haired youth could draw blood from the other, if he chose." "Arise thou, my life, and take the cudgel and the shield from the hand of the youth with the auburn hair, and draw blood from the yellow haired youth, if thou canst." So Peredur arose, and went to play with the yellow haired youth; and he lifted up his arm, and struck him such a mighty blow, that his brow fell over his eye, and the blood flowed forth. "Ah, my life," said the man, "come now, and sit down, for thou wilt become the best fighter with the sword of any in this island; and I am thy uncle, thy mother's brother. And with me shalt thou remain a space, in order to learn the manners and customs of different countries, and courtesy, and gentleness, and noble bearing. Leave, then, the habits and the discourse of thy mother, and I will be thy teacher; and I will raise thee to the rank of knight from this time forward. And thus do thou. If thou seest aught to cause thee wonder, ask not the meaning of it; if no one has the courtesy to inform thee, the reproach will not fall upon thee, but upon me that am thy teacher." And they had abundance of honour and service. And when it was time, they went to sleep. At the break of day,

Peredur arose, and took his horse, and with his uncle's permission, he rode forth. And he came to a vast desert wood, and at the further end of the wood was a meadow, and on the other side of the meadow he saw a large castle. And thitherward Peredur bent his way, and he found the gate open, and he proceeded to the hall. And he beheld a stately hoary-headed man sitting on one side of the hall, and many pages around him, who arose to receive and to honour Peredur. And they placed him by the side of the owner of the palace. Then they discoursed together; and when it was time to eat, they caused Peredur to sit beside the nobleman during the repast. And when they had eaten and drank as much as they desired, the nobleman asked Peredur, whether he could fight with a sword? "Were I to receive instruction," said Peredur, "I think I could." Now, there was on the floor of the hall a huge staple, as large as a warrior could grasp. "Take yonder sword," said the man to Peredur, "and strike the iron staple." So Peredur arose, and struck the staple, so that he cut it in two; and the sword broke into two parts also. "Place the two parts together, and reunite them," and Peredur placed them together, and they became entire as they were before. And a second time he struck upon the staple, so that both it and the sword broke in two, and as before they reunited. And the third time he gave a like blow, and placed the broken parts together, and neither the staple nor the sword would unite, as before. "Youth," said the nobleman, "come now, and sit down, and my blessing be upon thee. Thou fightest best with the sword of any man in the kingdom. Thou hast arrived at two thirds of thy strength, and the other third thou hast not yet obtained; and when thou attainest to thy full power, none will be able to contend with thee. I am thy uncle, thy mother's brother, and I am brother to the man in whose house thou wast last night." Then Peredur and his uncle discoursed together, and he beheld two youths enter the hall, and proceed up to the chamber, bearing a spear of mighty size, with three streams of blood flowing from the point to the ground. And when all the company saw this, they began wailing and lamenting. But for all that, the man did not break off his discourse with Peredur. And as he did not tell Peredur the meaning of what he saw, he forebore to ask him concerning it. And when the clamour had a little subsided, behold two maidens entered, with a large salver between them, in which was a man's head, surrounded by a profusion of blood. And thereupon the company of the court made so great an outcry, that it was irksome to be in the same hall with them. But at length they were silent. And when time was that they should sleep, Peredur was brought into a fair chamber.

And the next day, with his uncle's permission, he rode forth. And he came to a wood, and far within the wood he heard a loud cry, and he saw a beautiful woman with auburn hair, and a horse with a saddle upon it, standing near her, and a corpse by her side. And as she strove to place the corpse upon the horse, it fell to the ground, and thereupon she made a great lamentation. "Tell me, sister," said Peredur, "wherefore art thou bewailing?" "Oh! accursed Peredur, little pity has my ill fortune ever met with from thee." "Wherefore," said Peredur, "am I accursed?" "Because thou wast the cause of thy mother's death; for when thou didst ride forth against her will, anguish seized upon her heart, so that she died; and therefore art thou accursed. And the dwarf and the dwarfess that thou sawest at Arthur's Court, were the dwarfs of thy father and mother; and I am thy foster-sister, and this was my wedded husband, and he was slain by the knight that is in the glade in the wood; and do not thou go near him, lest thou shouldest be slain by him likewise." "My sister, thou dost reproach me wrongfully; through my having so long remained amongst you, I shall scarcely vanquish him; and had I continued longer, it would, indeed, be difficult for me to succeed. Cease, therefore, thy lamenting, for it is of no avail, and I will bury the body, and then I will go in quest of the knight, and see if I can do vengeance upon him." And when he had buried the body, they went to the place where the knight was, and found him riding proudly along the glade; and he enquired of Peredur whence he came. "I come from Arthur's Court." "And art thou one of Arthur's men?" "Yes, by my faith." "A profitable alliance, truly, is that of Arthur." And without further parlance, they encountered one another, and immediately Peredur overthrew the knight, and he besought mercy of Peredur. "Mercy shalt thou have," said he, "upon these terms, that thou take this woman in marriage, and do her all the honour and reverence in thy power, seeing thou hast, without cause, slain her wedded husband; and that thou go to Arthur's Court, and shew him that it was I that overthrew thee, to do him honour and service; and that thou tell him that I will never come to his court again until I have met with the tall man that is there, to take vengeance upon him for his insult to the dwarf and the dwarfess." And he took the knight's assurance, that he would perform all this. Then the knight provided the lady with a horse and garments that were suitable for her, and took her with him to Arthur's Court. And he told Arthur all that had occurred, and gave the defiance to Kai. And Arthur and all his household reproved Kai, for having driven such a youth as Peredur from his court.

Said Owain the son of Urien, "this youth will never come into the court until Kai has gone forth from it." "By my faith," said Arthur, "I will search all the deserts in the Island of Britain, until I find Peredur, and then let him and his adversary do their utmost to each other."

Then Peredur rode forward. And he came to a desert wood, where he saw not the track either of men or animals, and where there was nothing but bushes and weeds. And at the upper end of the wood he saw a vast castle, wherein were many strong towers; and when he came near the gate, he found the weeds taller than he had done elsewhere. And he struck the gate with the shaft of his lance, and thereupon behold a lean auburn-haired youth came to an opening in the battlements. "Choose thou, chieftain," said he.

"Whether shall I open the gate unto thee, or shall I announce unto those that are chief, that thou art at the gateway?" "Say that I am here," said Peredur, "and if it is desired that I should enter, I will go in." And the youth came back, and opened the gate for Peredur. And when he went into the hall, he beheld eighteen youths, lean and red headed, of the same height, and of the same aspect, and of the same dress, and of the same age as the one who had opened the gate for him. And they were well skilled in courtesy and in service. And they disarrayed him. Then they sat down to discourse. Thereupon, behold five maidens came from the chamber into the hall. And Peredur was certain that he had never seen another of so fair an aspect as the chief of the maidens. And she had an old garment of satin upon her, which had once been handsome, but was then so tattered, that her skin could be seen through it. And whiter was her skin than the bloom of crystal, and her hair and her two eyebrows were blacker than jet, and on her cheeks were two red spots, redder than whatever is reddest. And the maiden welcomed Peredur, and put her arms about his neck, and made him sit down beside her. Not long after this he saw two nuns enter, and a flask full of wine was borne by one, and six loaves of white bread by the other. "Lady," said they, "Heaven is witness, that there is not so much of food and liquor as this left in yonder Convent this night." Then they went to meat, and Peredur observed that the maiden wished to give more of the food and of the liquor to him than to any of the others. "My sister," said Peredur, "I will share out the food and the liquor." "Not so, my soul," said she. "By my faith but I will." So Peredur took the bread, and he gave an equal portion of it to each alike, as well as a cup full of the liquor. And when it was time for them to sleep, a chamber was prepared for Peredur, and he went to rest.

"Behold, sister," said the youths to the fairest and most exalted of the maidens, "we have counsel for thee." "What may it be?" she enquired. "Go to the youth that is in the upper chamber, and offer to become his wife, or the lady of his love, if it seem well to him." "That were indeed unfitting," said she. "Hitherto I have not been the lady love of any knight, and to make him such an offer before I am wooed by him, that, truly, can I not do." "By our confession to Heaven, unless thou actest thus, we will leave thee here to thy enemies, to do as they will with thee." And through fear of this, the maiden went forth; and shedding tears, she proceeded to the chamber. And with the noise of the door opening, Peredur awoke; and the maiden was weeping and lamenting. "Tell me, my sister," said Peredur, "wherefore dost thou weep?" "I will tell thee, lord," said she, "my father possessed these dominions as their chief, and this palace was his, and with it he held the best earldom in the kingdom; then the son of another earl sought me of my father, and I was not willing to be given unto him, and my father would not give me against my will, either to him or any earl in the world. And my father had no child except myself. And after my father's death, these dominions came into my own hands, and then was I less willing to accept him than before. So he made war upon me, and conquered all my possessions, except this one house. And through the valour of the men whom thou hast seen, who are my foster brothers, and the strength of the house, it can never be taken while food and drink remain. And now our provisions are exhausted; but as thou hast seen, we have been fed by the nuns, to whom the country is free. And at length they also are without supply of food or liquor. And at no later date than to-morrow, the earl will come against this place with all his forces; and if I fall into his power, my fate will be no better than to be given over to the grooms of his horses. Therefore, lord, I am come to offer to place myself in thy hands, that thou mayest succour me, either by taking me hence, or by defending me here, whichever may seem best unto thee." "Go, my sister," said he, "and sleep; nor will I depart from thee until I do that which thou requirest, or prove whether I can assist thee or not." The maiden went again to rest; and the next morning she came to Peredur, and saluted him. "Heaven prosper thee, my soul, and what tidings dost thou bring?" "None other, than that the earl and all his forces have alighted at the gate, and I never beheld any place so covered with tents, and thronged with knights challenging others to the combat." "Truly," said Peredur, "let my horse be made ready." So his horse was accoutred, and he arose, and sallied forth to the meadow. And there was a knight riding proudly along the meadow, having raised the signal for battle. And they encountered, and Peredur threw the knight over his horse's crupper to the ground. And at the close of the day, one of the chief knights came to fight with him, and he overthrew him also, so that he besought his mercy. "Who art thou?" said Peredur. "Verily," said he, "I am Master of the Household to the earl." "And how much of the countess's possessions is there in thy power?" "The third part, verily," answered he. "Then," said Peredur, "restore to her the third of her possessions in full, and all the profit thou hast made by them, and bring meat and drink for a hundred men, with their horses and arms, to her court this night. And thou shalt remain her captive, unless she wish to take thy life." And this he did forthwith. And that night the maiden was right joyful, and they fared plenteously.

And the next day Peredur rode forth to the meadow; and that day he vanquished a multitude of the host. And at the close of the day, there came a proud and stately knight, and Peredur overthrew him, and he besought his mercy. "Who art thou?" said Peredur. "I am Steward of the Palace," said he. "And how much of the maiden's possessions are under thy controul?" "One third part," answered he. "Verily," said Peredur, "thou shalt fully restore to the maiden her possessions, and, moreover, thou shalt give her meat and drink for two hundred men, and their horses and their arms. And for thyself, thou shalt be her captive." And immediately it was so done.

And the third day Peredur rode forth to the meadow; and he vanquished more that day than on either of the preceding. And at the close of the day, an earl came to encounter him, and he overthrew him, and he besought his mercy. "Who art thou?" said Peredur. "I am the earl," said he. "I will not conceal it from thee." "Verily," said Peredur, "thou shalt restore the whole of the maiden's earldom, and shalt give her thine own earldom in addition thereto, and meat and drink for three hundred men, and their horses and arms, and thou thyself shalt remain in her power." And thus it was fulfilled. And Peredur tarried three weeks in the country, causing tribute and obedience to be paid to the maiden, and the government to be placed in her hands. "With thy leave," said Peredur, "I will go hence." "Verily, my brother, desirest thou this?" "Yes, by my faith; and had it not been for love of thee, I should not have been here thus long." "My soul," said she, "who art thou?" "I am Peredur the son of Evrawc from the North; and if ever thou art in trouble or in danger, acquaint me therewith, and if I can, I will protect thee."

So Peredur rode forth. And far thence there met him a lady, mounted on a horse that was lean, and covered with sweat; and she saluted the youth. "Whence comest thou, my sister?" Then she told him the cause of her journey. Now she was the wife of the Lord of the Glade. "Behold," said he, "I am the knight through whom thou art in trouble, and he shall repent it, who has treated thee thus." Thereupon, behold a knight rode up, and he enquired of Peredur, if he had seen a knight such as he was seeking. "Hold thy peace," said Peredur, "I am he whom thou seekest; and by my faith, thou deservest ill of thy household for thy treatment of the maiden, for she is innocent concerning me." So they encountered, and they were not long in combat ere Peredur overthrew the knight, and he besought his mercy. "Mercy thou shalt have," said Peredur, "so thou wilt return by the way thou camest, and declare that thou holdest the maiden innocent, and so that thou wilt acknowledge unto her the reverse thou hast sustained at my hands." And the knight plighted him his faith thereto.

Then Peredur rode forward. And above him he beheld a castle, and thitherward he went. And he struck upon the gate with his lance, and then, behold a comely auburn-haired youth opened the gate, and he had the stature of a warrior, and the years of a boy. And when Peredur came into the hall, there was a tall and stately lady sitting in a chair, and many handmaidens around her; and the lady rejoiced at his coming. And when it was time, they went to meat. And after their repast was finished, "It were well for thee, chieftain," said she, "to go elsewhere to sleep." "Wherefore can I not sleep here?" said Peredur. "Nine sorceresses are here, my soul, of the sorceresses of Gloucester, and their father and their mother are with them; and unless we can make our escape before daybreak, we shall be slain; and already they have conquered and laid waste all the country, except this one dwelling." "Behold," said Peredur, "I will remain here to-night, and if you are in trouble, I will do you what service I can; but harm shall you not receive from me." So they went to rest. And with the break of day, Peredur heard a dreadful outcry. And he hastily arose, and went forth in his vest and his doublet, with his sword about his neck, and he saw a sorceress overtake one of the watch, who cried out violently. Peredur attacked the sorceress, and struck her upon the head with his sword, so that he flattened her helmet and her headpiece like a dish upon her head.

"Thy mercy, goodly Peredur, son of Evrawc, and the mercy of Heaven." "How knowest thou, hag, that I am Peredur?" "By destiny, and the foreknowledge that I should suffer harm from thee. And thou shalt take a horse and armour of me; and with me thou shalt go to learn chivalry and the use of thy arms." Said Peredur, "Thou shalt have mercy, if thou pledge thy faith thou wilt never more injure the dominions of the countess." And Peredur took surety of this, and with permission of the countess, he set forth with the sorceress to the palace of the sorceresses. And there he remained for three weeks, and then he made choice of a horse and arms, and went his way.

And in the evening he entered a valley, and at the head of the valley he came to a hermit's cell, and the hermit welcomed him gladly, and there he spent the night. And in the morning he arose, and when he went forth, behold a shower of snow had fallen the night before, and a hawk had killed a wild fowl in front of the cell. And the noise of the horse scared the hawk away, and a raven alighted upon the bird. And Peredur stood, and compared the blackness of the raven, and whiteness of the snow, and the redness of the blood, to the hair of the lady that best he loved, which was blacker than jet, and to her skin which was whiter than the snow, and to the two red spots upon her cheeks, which were redder than the blood upon the snow appeared to be.

Now Arthur and his household were in search of Peredur. "Know ye," said Arthur, "who is the knight with the long spear that stands by the brook up yonder?" "Lord," said one of them, "I will go and learn who he is." So the youth came to the place where Peredur was, and asked him what he did thus, and who he was. And from the intensity with which he thought upon the lady whom best he loved, he gave him no answer. Then the youth thrust at Peredur with his lance, and Peredur turned upon him, and struck him over his horse's crupper to the ground. And after this, four and twenty youths came to him, and he did not answer one more than another, but gave the same reception to all, bringing them with one single thrust to the ground. And then came Kai, and spoke to Peredur rudely and angrily; and Peredur took him with his lance under the jaw, and cast him from him with a thrust, so that he broke his arm and his shoulder blade, and he rode over him one and twenty times. And while he lay thus, stunned with the violence of the pain that he had suffered, his horse returned back at a wild and prancing pace. And when the household saw the horse come back without his rider, they rode forth in haste to the place where the encounter had been. And when they first came there, they thought that Kai was slain; but they found that if he had a skilful physician, he yet might live. And Peredur moved not from his meditation, on seeing the concourse that was around Kai. And Kai was brought to Arthur's tent, and Arthur caused skilful physicians to come to him. And Arthur was grieved that Kai had met with this reverse, for he loved him greatly.

"Then," said Gwalchmai, "it is not fitting that any should disturb an honourable knight from his thought unadvisedly; for either he is pondering some damage that he has sustained, or he is thinking of the lady whom best he loves. And through such illadvised proceeding, perchance this misadventure has befallen him who last met with him. And if it seem well to thee, lord, I will go and see if this knight has changed from his thought; and if he has, I will ask him courteously to come and visit thee." Then Kai was wrath, and he spoke angry and spiteful words. "Gwalchmai," said he, "I know that thou wilt bring him because he is fatigued. Little praise and honour, nevertheless, wilt thou have from vanquish-ing a weary knight, who is tired with fighting. Yet, thus hast thou gained the advantage over many. And while thy speech and thy soft words last, a coat of thin linen were armour sufficient for thee, and thou wilt not need to break either lance or sword in fighting with the knight in the state he is in." Then said Gwalchmai to Kai, "Thou mightest use more pleasant words, wert thou so minded; and it behoves thee not upon me to wreak thy wrath and thy displeasure. Methinks I shall bring the knight hither with me without breaking either my arm or my shoulder." Then said Arthur to Gwalchmai, "thou speakest like a wise and a prudent man; go, and take enough of armour about thee, and choose thy horse." And Gwalchmai accoutred himself, and rode forward hastily to the place where Peredur was.

And Peredur was resting on the shaft of his spear, pondering the same thought, and Gwalchmai came to him without any signs of hostility, and said to him, "If I thought that it would be as agreeable to thee as it would be to me, I would converse with thee. I have also a message from Arthur unto thee, to pray thee to come and visit him. And two men have been before on this errand." "That is true," said Peredur, "and uncourteously they came. They attacked me, and I was annoyed thereat, for it was not pleasing to me to be drawn from the thought that I was in, for I was thinking of the lady whom best I love; and thus was she brought to my mind,—I was looking upon the snow, and upon the raven, and upon the drops of the blood of the bird that the hawk had killed upon the snow. And I bethought me that her whiteness was like that of the snow, and that the blackness of her hair and her eyebrows was like that of the raven, and that the two red spots upon her cheeks were like the two drops of blood." Said Gwalchmai, "This was not an ungentle thought, and I should marvel if it were pleasant to thee to be drawn from it." "Tell me," said Peredur, "Is Kai in Arthur's Court?" "He is," said he, "and behold he is the knight that fought with thee last; and it would have been better for him had he not come, for his arm and his shoulder blade were broken with the fall which he had from thy spear." "Verily," said Peredur, "I am not sorry to have thus begun to avenge the insult to the dwarf and dwarfess." Then Gwalchmai marvelled to hear him speak of the dwarf and the dwarfess; and he approached him, and threw his arms around his neck, and asked him what was his name. "Peredur the son of Evrawc am I called," said he, "and thou?

Who art thou?" "I am called Gwalchmai," he replied. "I am right glad to meet with thee," said Peredur, "for in every country where I have been, I have heard of thy fame for prowess and uprightness, and I solicit thy fellowship." "Thou shalt have it, by my faith, and grant me thine," said he. "Gladly will I do so," answered Peredur.

So they rode forth together joyfully towards the place where Arthur was; and when Kai saw them coming, he said, "I knew that Gwalchmai needed not to fight the knight. And it is no wonder that he should gain fame; more can he do by his fair words, than I by the strength of my arm." And Peredur went with Gwalchmai to his tent, and they took off their armour. And Peredur put on garments like those that Gwalchmai wore; and they went together unto Arthur, and saluted him. "Behold, lord," said Gwalchmai, "him whom thou hast sought so long." "Welcome unto thee, chieftain," said Arthur. "With me thou shalt remain; and had I known thy valour had been such, thou shouldst not have left me as thou didst. Nevertheless, this was predicted of thee by the dwarf and the dwarfess, whom Kai illtreated, and whom thou hast avenged." And hereupon, behold there came the Queen and her handmaidens, and Peredur saluted them. And they were rejoiced to see him, and bad him welcome. And Arthur did him great honour and respect, and they returned towards Caerlleon.

And the first night, Peredur came to Caerlleon, to Arthur's Court, and as he walked in the city after his repast, behold, there met him Angharad Law Eurawc. "By my faith, sister," said Peredur, "thou art a beauteous and lovely maiden; and were it pleasing to thee, I could love thee above all women." "I pledge my faith," said she, "that I do not love thee, nor will I ever do so." "I also pledge my faith," said Peredur, "that I will never speak a word to any Christian again, until thou come to love me above all men."

The next day, Peredur went forth by the high road, along a mountain ridge, and he saw a valley of a circular form, the confines of which were rocky and wooded. And the flat part of the valley was in meadows, and there were fields betwixt the meadows and the wood. And in the bosom of the wood he saw large black houses, of uncouth workmanship. And he dismounted, and led his horse towards the wood. And a little way within the wood he saw a rocky ledge, along which the road lay. And upon the ledge was a lion bound by a chain, and sleeping. And beneath the lion he saw a deep pit, of immense size, full of the bones of men and animals. And Peredur drew his sword, and struck the lion, so that he fell into the mouth of the pit, and hung there by the chain; and with a second blow he struck the chain, and broke it, and the lion fell into the pit, and Peredur led his horse over the rocky ledge, until he came into the valley. And in the centre of the valley he saw a fair Castle, and he went towards it. And in the meadow by the Castle he beheld a huge grey man sitting, who was larger than any man he had ever before seen. And two young pages were shooting the hilts of their daggers, of the bone of the sea horse. And one of the pages had red hair, and the other auburn. And they went before him to the place where the grey man was. And Peredur saluted him. And the grey man said, "Disgrace to the beard of my porter." Then Peredur understood that the porter was the lion. And the grey man and the pages went together into the Castle, and Peredur accompanied them; and he found it a fair and noble place. And they proceeded to the hall, and the tables were already laid, and upon them was abundance of food and liquor. And thereupon he saw an aged woman and a young woman come from the chamber; and they were the most stately women he had ever seen. Then they washed, and went to meat, and the grey man sat in the upper seat at the head of the table, and the aged woman next to him. And Peredur and the maiden were placed together; and the two young pages served them. And the maiden gazed sorrowfully upon Peredur, and Peredur asked the maiden, wherefore she was sad. "For thee, my soul; for, from when I first beheld thee, I have loved thee above all men. And it pains me to know that so gentle a youth as thou should have such a doom as awaits thee to-morrow. Sawest thou the numerous black houses in the bosom of the wood. All these belong to the vassals of the grey man yonder, who is my father. And they are all giants. And to-morrow they will rise up against thee, and will slay thee. And the Round Valley is this valley called." "Listen, fair maiden, wilt thou contrive that my horse and arms be in the same lodging with me to-night." "Gladly will I cause it so to be, by Heaven, if I can."

And when it was time for them to sleep rather than to carouse, they went to rest. And the maiden caused Peredur's horse and arms to be in the same lodging with him. And the next morning Peredur heard a great tumult of men and horses around the Castle. And Peredur arose, and armed himself and his horse, and went to the meadow. Then the aged woman and the maiden came to the grey man, "Lord," said they, "take the word of the youth, that he will never disclose what he has seen in this place, and we will be his sureties that he keep it." "I will not do so, by my faith," said the grey man. So Peredur fought with the host; and towards evening, he had slain the one third of them without receiving any hurt himself. Then said the aged woman, "Behold, many of thy host have been slain by the youth. Do thou, therefore, grant him mercy." "I will not grant it, by my faith," said he. And the aged woman and the fair maiden were upon the battlements of the Castle, looking forth. And at that juncture, Peredur encountered the yellow-haired youth, and slew him. "Lord," said the maiden, "grant the young man mercy." "That will I not do, by Heaven," he replied; and thereupon Peredur attacked the auburn-haired youth, and slew him likewise. "It were better thou hadst accorded mercy to the youth, before he had slain thy two sons; for now scarcely wilt thou thyself escape from him." "Go, maiden, and beseech the youth to grant mercy unto us, for we yield ourselves into his hands." So the maiden came to the place where Peredur was, and besought mercy for her father, and for all such of his vassals as had escaped alive. "Thou shalt have it, on condition that thy father, and all that are under him, go and render homage to Arthur, and tell him that it was his vassal Peredur that did him this service." "This will we do willingly, by Heaven." "And you shall also receive baptism; and I will send to Arthur, and beseech him to bestow this valley upon thee, and upon thy heirs after thee for ever." Then they went in, and the grey man and the tall woman saluted Peredur. And the grey man said unto him, "Since I have possessed this valley, I have not seen any Christian depart with his life, save thyself. And we will go to do homage to Arthur, and to embrace the faith, and be baptized." Then said Peredur, "To Heaven I render thanks that I have not broken my vow to the lady that best I love, which was, that I would not speak one word unto any Christian."

That night they tarried there. And the next day, in the morning, the grey man, with his company, set forth to Arthur's Court; and they did homage unto Arthur, and he caused them to be baptized. And the grey man told Arthur, that it was Peredur that had vanquished them. And Arthur gave the valley to the grey man and his company, to hold it of him as Peredur had besought. And with Arthur's permission, the grey man went back to the Round Valley.

Peredur rode forward next day, and he traversed a vast tract of desert, in which no dwellings were. And at length he came to a habitation, mean and small. And there he heard that there was a serpent that lay upon a gold ring, and suffered none to inhabit the country for seven miles around. And Peredur came to the place where he heard the serpent was. And angrily, furiously, and desperately fought he with the serpent; and at the last he killed it, and took away the ring. And thus he was for a long time without speaking a word to any Christian. And therefrom he lost his colour and his aspect, through extreme longing after the Court of Arthur, and the society of the lady whom best he loved and of his companions. Then he proceeded forward to Arthur's Court, and on the road there met him Arthur's household going on a particular errand, with Kai at their head. And Peredur knew them all, but none of the household recognized him. "Whence comest thou, chieftain?" said Kai.

And this he asked him twice, and three times, and he answered him not. And Kai thrust him through the thigh with his lance. And lest he should be compelled to speak, and to break his vow, he went on without stopping. "Then," said Gwalchmai, "I declare to Heaven, Kai, that thou hast acted ill in committing such an outrage on a youth like this, who cannot speak. And Gwalchmai returned back to Arthur's Court. "Lady," said he to Gwenhwyvar, "seest thou how wicked an outrage Kai has committed upon this youth who cannot speak; for Heaven's sake, and for mine, cause him to have medical care before I come back, and I will repay thee the charge."

And before the men returned from their errand, a knight came to the meadow beside Arthur's Palace, to dare some one to the encounter. And his challenge was accepted; and Peredur fought with him, and overthrew him. And for a week he overthrew one knight every day.

And one day, Arthur and his household were going to Church, and they beheld a knight who had raised the signal for combat. "Verily," said Arthur, "by the valour of men, I will not go hence until I have my horse and my arms to overthrow yonder boor." Then went the attendants to fetch Arthur's horse and arms. And Peredur met the attendants as they were going back, and he took the horse and arms from them, and proceeded to the meadow; and all those who saw him arise and go to do battle with the knight, went upon the tops of the houses, and the mounds, and the high places, to behold the combat. And Peredur beckoned with his hand to the knight to commence the fight. And the knight thrust at him, but he was not thereby moved from where he stood. And Peredur spurred his horse, and ran at him wrathfully, furiously, fiercely, desperately, and with mighty rage, and he gave him a thrust, deadly-wounding, severe, furious, adroit and strong, under his jaw, and raised him out of his saddle, and cast him a long way from him. And Peredur went back, and left the horse and the arms with the attendant as before, and he went on foot to the Palace.

Then Peredur went by the name of the Dumb Youth. And behold, Angharad Law Eurawc met him. "I declare to Heaven, chieftain," said she, "woful is it that thou canst not speak; for couldst thou speak, I would love thee best of all men; and, by my faith, although thou canst not, I do love thee above all." "Heaven reward thee, my sister," said Peredur, "by my faith, I also do love thee." Thereupon it was known that he was Peredur. And then he held fellowship with Gwalchmai, and Owain the son of Urien, and all the household, and he remained in Arthur's Court.

Arthur was in Caerlleon upon Usk; and he went to hunt, and Peredur went with him. And Peredur let loose his dog upon a hart, and the dog killed the hart in a desert place. And a short space from him he saw signs of a dwelling, and towards the dwelling he went, and he beheld a hall, and at the door of the hall he found bald swarthy youths playing at chess. And when he entered, he beheld three maidens sitting on a bench, and they were all clothed alike, as became persons of high rank. And he came, and sat by them upon the bench; and one of the maidens looked steadfastly upon Peredur, and wept. And Peredur asked her wherefore she was weeping. "Through grief, that I should see so fair a youth as thou art, slain." "Who will slay me?" enquired Peredur. "If thou art so daring as to remain here to-night, I will tell thee." "How great soever my danger may be from remaining here, I will listen unto thee." "This Palace is owned by him who is my father," said the maiden, "and he slays every one who comes hither without his leave." "What sort of a man is thy father, that he is able to slay every one thus?" "A man who does violence and wrong unto his neighbours, and who renders justice unto none." And hereupon he saw the youths arise and clear the chessmen from the board. And he heard a great tumult; and after the tumult there came in a huge black one-eyed man, and the maidens arose to meet him. And they disarrayed him, and he went and sat down; and after he had rested and pondered awhile, he looked at Peredur, and asked who the knight was." "Lord," said one of the maidens, "he is the fairest and gentlest youth that ever thou didst see. And for the sake of Heaven, and of thine own dignity, have patience with him." "For thy sake I will have patience, and I will grant him his life this night." Then Peredur came towards them to the fire, and partook of food and liquor, and entered into discourse with the ladies. And being elated with the liquor, he said to the black man, "It is a marvel to me, so mighty as thou sayest thou art, who could have put out thine eye?" "It is one of my habits," said the black man, "that whosoever puts to me the question which thou hast asked, shall not escape with his life, either as a free gift, or for a price." "Lord," said the maiden, "whatsoever he may say to thee in jest, and through the excitement of liquor, make good that which thou saidest and didst promise me just now." "I will do so, gladly, for thy sake," said he. "Willingly will I grant him his life this night." And that night thus they remained.

And the next day the black man got up, and put on his armour, and said to Peredur, "Arise, man, and suffer death." And Peredur said unto him, "Do one of two things, black man; if thou wilt fight with me, either throw off thy own armour, or give arms to me, that I may encounter thee." "Ha! man," said he, "couldst thou fight, if thou hadst arms? Take, then, what arms thou dost choose." And thereupon the maiden came to Peredur with such arms as pleased him: and he fought with the black man, and forced him to crave his mercy. "Black man, thou shalt have mercy, provided thou tell me who thou art, and who put out thine eye." "Lord, I will tell thee, I lost it in fighting with the Black Serpent of the Carn. There is a mound, which is called the Mound of Mourning; and on the mound there is a carn, and in the carn there is a serpent, and on the tail of the serpent there is a stone, and the virtues of the stone are such, that whosoever should hold it in one hand, in the other he will have as much gold as he may desire. And in fighting with this serpent was it that I lost my eye. And the Black Oppressor am I called. And for this reason I am called the Black Oppressor, that there is not a single man around me whom I have not oppressed, and justice have I done unto none." "Tell me," said Peredur, "how far is it hence?" "The same day that thou settest forth, thou wilt come to the Palace of the Sons of the King of the Tortures." "Wherefore are they called thus?" "The Addanc of the Lake slays them once every day. When thou goest thence, thou wilt come to the Court of the Countess of the Achievements." "What achievements are there?" asked Peredur. "Three hundred men there are in her household, and unto every stranger that comes to the Court, the achievements of her household are related. And this is the manner of it,—the three hundred men of the household sit next unto the Lady; and that not through disrespect unto the guests, but that they may relate the achievements of the household. And the day that thou goest thence, thou wilt reach the Mound of Mourning, and round about the mound there are the owners of three hundred tents guarding the serpent." "Since thou hast, indeed, been an oppressor so long," said Peredur, "I will cause that thou continue so no longer." So he slew him.

Then the maiden spoke, and began to converse with him. "If thou wast poor when thou camest here, henceforth thou wilt be rich through the treasure of the black man whom thou hast slain. Thou seest the many lovely maidens that there are in this Court, thou shalt have her whom thou best likest for the lady of thy love." "Lady, I came not hither from my country to woo; but match yourselves as it liketh you with the comely youths I see here; and none of your goods do I desire, for I need them not." Then Peredur rode forward, and he came to the Palace of the Sons of the King of the Tortures; and when he entered the Palace, he saw none but women; and they rose up, and were joyful at his coming; and as they began to discourse with him, he beheld a charger arrive, with a saddle upon it, and a corpse in the saddle. And one of the women arose, and took the corpse from the saddle, and anointed it in a vessel of warm water, which was below the door, and placed precious balsam upon it; and the man rose up alive, and came to the place where Peredur was, and greeted him, and was joyful to see him. And two other men came in upon their saddles, and the maiden treated these two in the same manner as she had done the first. Then Peredur asked the chieftain wherefore it was thus. And they told him, that there was an Addanc in a cave, which slew them once every day. And thus they remained that night.

And next morning the youths arose to sally forth, and Peredur besought them, for the sake of the ladies of their love, to permit him to go with them; but they refused him, saying, "If thou shouldst be slain there, thou hast none to bring thee back to life again." And they rode forward, and Peredur followed after them; and after they had disappeared out of his sight, he came to a mound, whereon sat the fairest lady he had ever beheld. "I know thy quest," said she, "thou art going to encounter the Addanc, and he will slay thee, and that not by courage, but by craft. He has a cave, and at the entrance of the cave there is a stone pillar, and he sees every one that enters, and none see him; and from behind the pillar he slays every one with a poisonous dart. And if thou wouldst pledge me thy faith, to love me above all women, I would give thee a stone, by which thou shouldst see him when thou goest in, and he should not see thee." "I will, by my troth," said Peredur, "for when first I beheld thee, I loved thee; and where shall I seek thee?" "When thou seekest me, seek towards India." And the maiden vanished, after placing the stone in Peredur's hand.

And he came towards a valley, through which ran a river; and the borders of the valley were wooded, and on each side of the river were level meadows. And on one side of the river he saw a flock of white sheep, and on the other a flock of black sheep. And whenever one of the white sheep bleated, one of the black sheep would cross over, and become white; and when one of the black sheep bleated, one of the white sheep would cross over, and become black. And he saw a tall tree by the side of the river, one half of which was in flames from the root to the top, and the other half was green and in full leaf. And nigh thereto he saw a youth sitting upon a mound, and two greyhounds, white breasted, and spotted, in leashes, lying by his side. And certain was he, that he had never seen a youth of so royal a bearing as he. And in the wood opposite he heard hounds raising a herd of deer. And Peredur saluted the youth, and the youth greeted him in return. And there were three roads leading from the mound; two of them were wide roads, and the third was more narrow. And Peredur enquired where the three roads went. "One of them goes to my palace," said the youth, "and one of two things I counsel thee to do, either to proceed to my palace, which is before thee, and where thou wilt find my wife, or else to remain here to see the hounds chasing the roused deer from the wood to the plain. And thou shalt see the best greyhounds thou didst ever behold, and the boldest in the chase, kill them by the water beside us; and when it is time to go to meat, my page will come with my horse to meet me, and thou shalt rest in my palace to-night." "Heaven reward thee; but I cannot tarry, for onward must I go." "The other road leads to the town, which is near here, and wherein food and liquor may be bought; and the road which is narrower than the others, goes towards the cave of the Addanc." "With thy permission, young man, I will go that way."

And Peredur went towards the cave. And he took the stone in his left hand, and his lance in his right. And as he went in, he perceived the Addanc, and he pierced him through with his lance, and cut off his head. And as he came from the cave, behold the three companions were at the entrance; and they saluted Peredur, and told him that there was a prediction that he should slay that monster.

And Peredur gave the head to the young men, and they offered him in marriage whichever of the three sisters he might choose, and half their kingdom with her. "I came not hither to woo," said Peredur, "but if peradventure I took a wife, I should prefer your sister to all others." And Peredur rode forward, and he heard a noise behind him. And he looked back, and saw a man upon a red horse, with red armour upon him; and the man rode up by his side, and saluted him, and wished him the favour of Heaven and of man. And Peredur greeted the youth kindly. "Lord, I come to make a request unto thee." "What wouldest thou?" "That thou shouldest take me as thine attendant." "Who then should I take as my attendant, if I did so?" "I will not conceal from thee what kindred I am of. Etlym Gleddyv Coch am I called, an Earl from the East Country." "I marvel that thou shouldest offer to become attendant to a man whose possessions are no greater than thine own; for I have but an earldom like thyself. But since thou desirest to be my attendant, I will take thee joyfully."

And they went forward to the Court of the Countess, and all they of the Court were glad at their coming; and they were told it was not through disrespect they were placed below the household, but that such was the usage of the Court. For, whoever should overthrow the three hundred men of her household, would sit next the Countess, and she would love him above all men. And Peredur having overthrown the three hundred men of her household, sat down beside her, and the Countess said, "I thank Heaven that I have a youth so fair and so valiant as thou, since I have not obtained the man whom best I love." "Who is he whom best thou lovest?" "By my faith, Etlym Gleddyv Coch is the man whom I love best, and I have never seen him." "Of a truth, Etlym is my companion; and behold here he is, and for his sake did I come to joust with thy household. And he could have done so better than I, had it pleased him. And I do give thee unto him." "Heaven reward thee, fair youth, and I will take the man whom I love above all others." And the Countess became Etlym's bride from that moment.

And the next day Peredur set forth towards the Mound of Mourning. "By thy hand, lord, but I will go with thee," said Etlym. Then they went forwards till they came in sight of the mound and the tents. "Go unto yonder men," said Peredur to Etlym, "and desire them to come and do me homage." So Etlym went unto them, and said unto them thus,—"Come and do homage to my lord." "Who is thy lord?" said they. "Peredur with the long lance is my lord," said Etlym. "Were it permitted to slay a messenger, thou shouldest not go back to thy lord alive, for making unto Kings, and Earls, and Barons, so arrogant a demand as to go and do him homage." Peredur desired him to go back to them, and to give them their choice, either to do him homage, or to do battle with him. And they chose rather to do battle. And that day Peredur overthrew the owners of a hundred tents. And the next day he overthrew the owners of a hundred more; and the third day the remaining hundred took counsel to do homage to Peredur. And Peredur enquired of them, wherefore they were there. And they told him they were guarding the serpent until he should die. "For then should we fight for the stone among ourselves, and whoever should be conqueror among us would have the stone." "Wait here," said Peredur, "and I will go to encounter the serpent." "Not so, lord," said they, "we will go altogether to encounter the serpent." "Verily," said Peredur, "that will I not permit; for if the serpent be slain, I shall derive no more fame therefrom than one of you." Then he went to the place where the serpent was, and slew it, and came back to them, and said, "Reckon up what you have spent since you have been here, and I will repay you to the full." And he paid to each what he said was his claim. And he required of them only that they should acknowledge themselves his vassals. And he said to Etlym, "Go back unto her whom thou lovest best, and I will go forwards, and I will reward thee for having been my attendant." And he gave Etlym the stone. "Heaven repay thee and prosper thee," said Etlym.

And Peredur rode thence, and he came to the fairest valley he had ever seen, through which ran a river; and there he beheld many tents of various colours. And he marvelled still more at the number of water-mills and of wind-mills that he saw. And there rode up with him a tall auburn-haired man, in a workman's garb, and Peredur enquired of him who he was. "I am the chief miller," said he, "of all the mills yonder." "Wilt thou give me lodging?" said Peredur. "I will, gladly," he answered. And Peredur came to the miller's house, and the miller had a fair and pleasant dwelling. And Peredur asked money as a loan from the miller, that he might buy meat and liquor for himself, and for the household, and he promised him that he would pay him again ere he went thence. And he enquired of the miller, wherefore such a multitude were there assembled. Said the miller to Peredur, "One thing is certain; either thou art a man from afar, or thou art beside thyself. The Empress of Cristinobyl the Great is here; and she will have no one but the man who is most valiant; for riches does she not require. And it was impossible to bring food for so many thousands as are here, therefore were all these mills constructed." And that night they took their rest.

And the next day Peredur arose, and he equipped himself and his horse for the tournament. And among the other tents he beheld one, which was the fairest he had ever seen. And he saw a beauteous maiden leaning her head out of a window of the tent, and he had never seen a maiden more lovely than she. And upon her was a garment of satin. And he gazed fixedly on the maiden, and began to love her greatly. And he remained there, gazing upon the maiden from morning until mid-day, and from mid-day until evening; and then the tournament was ended; and he went to his lodging, and drew off his armour. Then he asked money of the miller as a loan, and the miller's wife was wroth with Peredur; nevertheless, the miller lent him the money. And the next day he did in like manner as he had done the day before. And at night he came to his lodging, and took money as a loan from the miller. And the third day, as he was in the same place, gazing upon the maiden, he felt a hard blow between the neck and the shoulder, from the edge of an axe. And when he looked behind him, he saw that it was the miller; and the miller said to him, "Do one of two things; either turn thy head from hence, or go to the tournament." And Peredur smiled on the miller, and went to the tournament; and all that encountered him that day, he overthrew. And as many as he vanquished, he sent as a gift to the Empress, and their horses and arms he sent as a gift to the wife of the miller, in payment of the borrowed money. Peredur attended the tournament until all were overthrown, and he sent all the men to the prison of the Empress, and the horses and arms to the wife of the miller, in payment of the borrowed money. And the Empress sent to the Knight of the Mill, to ask him to come and visit her. And Peredur went not for the first nor for the second message. And the third time she sent an hundred knights to bring him against his will, and they went to him, and told him their mission from the Empress.

And Peredur fought well with them, and caused them to be bound like stags, and thrown into the mill dyke. And the Empress sought advice of a wise man, who was in her council; and he said to her, "With thy permission, I will go to him myself." So he came to Peredur, and saluted him, and besought him, for the sake of the lady of his love, to come and visit the Empress. And they went, together with the miller. And Peredur went and sat down in the outer chamber of the tent, and she came and placed herself by his side. And there was but little discourse between them. And Peredur took his leave, and went to his lodging.

And the next day he came to visit her, and when he came into the tent, there was no one chamber less decorated than the others. And they knew not where he would sit. And Peredur went and sat beside the Empress, and discoursed with her courteously. And while they were thus, they beheld a black man enter with a goblet full of wine in his hand. And he dropped upon his knee before the Empress, and besought her to give it to no one who would not fight with him for it. And she looked upon Peredur. "Lady," said he, "bestow on me the goblet." And Peredur drank the wine, and gave the goblet to the miller's wife. And while they were thus, behold there entered a black man, of larger stature than the other, with a wild beast's claw in his hand, wrought into the form of a goblet, and filled with wine. And he presented it to the Empress, and besought her to give it to no one but the man who would fight with him. "Lady," said Peredur, "bestow it on me." And she gave it to him. And Peredur drank the wine, and sent the goblet to the wife of the miller. And while they were thus, behold a rough-looking crisp-haired man, taller than either of the others, came in with a bowl in his hand full of wine; and he bent upon his knee, and gave it into the hands of the Empress, and he besought her to give it to none but him who would fight with him for it; and she gave it to Peredur, and he sent it to the miller's wife. And that night Peredur returned to his lodging; and the next day he accoutred himself and his horse, and went to the meadow, and slew the three men. Then Peredur proceeded to the tent, and the Empress said to him, "Goodly Peredur, remember the faith thou didst pledge me when I gave thee the stone, and thou didst kill the Addanc." "Lady," answered he, "thou sayest truth, I do remember it." And Peredur was entertained by the Empress fourteen years, as the story relates.

Arthur was at Caerlleon upon Usk, his principal palace; and in the centre of the floor of the hall were four men sitting on a carpet of velvet, Owain the son of Urien, and Gwalchmai the son of Gwyar, and Howel the son of Emyr Llydaw, and Peredur of the long lance. And thereupon they saw a black curly-headed maiden enter, riding upon a yellow mule, with jagged thongs in her hand, to urge it on; and having a rough and hideous aspect. Blacker were her face and her two hands than the blackest iron covered with pitch; and her hue was not more frightful than her form. High cheeks had she, and a face lengthened downwards, and a short nose with distended nostrils. And one eye was of a piercing mottled grey, and the other was as black as jet, deep sunk in her head. And her teeth were long and yellow, more yellow were they than the flower of the broom. And her stomach rose from the breast bone, higher than her chin. And her back was in the shape of a crook, and her legs were large and bony. And her figure was very thin and spare, except her feet and her legs, which were of huge size. And she greeted Arthur and all his household except Peredur. And to Peredur she spoke harsh and angry words. "Peredur, I greet thee not, seeing that thou dost not merit it. Blind was fate in giving thee fame and favour. When thou wast in the Court of the Lame King, and didst see there the youth bearing the streaming spear, from the points of which were drops of blood flowing in streams, even to the hand of the youth, and many other wonders likewise, thou didst not enquire their meaning nor their cause. Hadst thou done so, the King would have been restored to health, and his dominions to peace. Whereas, from henceforth, he will have to endure battles and conflicts, and his knights will perish, and wives will be widowed, and maidens will be left portionless, and all this is because of thee." Then said she unto Arthur, "May it please thee, lord, my dwelling is far hence, in the stately castle of which thou hast heard, and therein are five hundred and sixty six knights of the order of Chivalry, and the lady whom best he loves with each; and whoever would acquire fame in arms, and encounters, and conflicts, he will gain it there, if he deserve it. And whoso would reach the summit of fame and of honour, I know where he may find it. There is a Castle on a lofty mountain, and there is a maiden therein, and she is detained a prisoner there, and whoever shall set her free will attain the summit of the fame of the world." And thereupon she rode away.

Said Gwalchmai, "By my faith, I will not rest tranquilly until I have proved if I can release the maiden." And many of Arthur's household joined themselves with him. Then, likewise, said Peredur, "By my faith, I will not rest tranquilly until I know the story and the meaning of the lance whereof the black maiden spoke." And while they were equipping themselves, behold a knight came to the gate. And he had the size and the strength of a warrior, and was equipped with arms and habiliments. And he went forward, and saluted Arthur and all his household, except Gwalchmai. And the knight had upon his shoulder a shield, ingrained with gold, with a fesse of azure blue upon it, and his whole armour was of the same hue. And he said to Gwalchmai, "Thou didst slay my lord, by thy treachery and deceit, and that will I prove upon thee." Then Gwalchmai rose up. "Behold," said he, "here is my gage against thee, to maintain either in this place, or wherever else thou wilt, that I am not a traitor or deceiver." "Before the King whom I obey, will I that my encounter with thee take place," said the knight. "Willingly," said Gwalchmai, "go forward, and I will follow thee." So the knight went forth, and Gwalchmai accoutred himself, and there was offered unto him abundance of armour, but he would take none but his own. And when Gwalchmai and Peredur were equipped, they set forth to follow him, by reason of their fellowship, and of the great friendship that was between them. And they did not go after him in company together, but each went his own way.

At the dawn of day, Gwalchmai came to a valley, and in the valley he saw a fortress, and within the fortress a vast palace, and lofty towers around it. And he beheld a knight coming out to hunt from the other side, mounted on a spirited black snorting palfrey, that advanced at a prancing pace, proudly stepping, and nimbly bounding, and sure of foot; and this was the man to whom the palace belonged. And Gwalchmai saluted him, "Heaven prosper thee, chieftain," said he, "and whence comest thou?" "I come," answered he, "from the Court of Arthur." "And art thou Arthur's vassal?" "Yes, by my faith," said Gwalchmai. "I will give thee good counsel," said the knight. "I see that thou art tired and weary, go unto my palace, if it may please thee, and tarry there to-night." "Willingly, lord," said he, "and Heaven reward thee." "Take this ring as a token to the porter, and go forward to yonder tower, and therein thou wilt find my sister." And Gwalchmai went to the gate, and shewed the ring, and proceeded to the tower. And on entering, he beheld a large blazing fire, burning without smoke, and with a bright and lofty flame, and a beauteous and stately maiden was sitting on a chair by the fire. And the maiden was glad at his coming, and welcomed him, and advanced to meet him. And he went and sat beside the maiden, and they took their repast. And when their repast was over, they discoursed pleasantly together. And while they were thus, behold there entered a venerable hoary-headed man. "Ah! base girl," said he, "if thou didst think that it was right for thee to entertain and to sit by yonder man; thou wouldest not do so." And he withdrew his head, and went forth. "Ha! chieftain," said the maiden, "if thou wilt do as I counsel thee, thou wilt shut the door, lest the man should have a plot against thee." Upon that Gwalchmai arose, and when he came near unto the door, the man, with sixty others, fully armed, were ascending the tower. And Gwalchmai defended the door with a chess-board, that none might enter until the man should return from the chase. And thereupon, behold the earl arrived. "What is all this?" asked he. "It is a sad thing," said the hoary-headed man, "the young girl yonder has been sitting and eating with him who slew your father. He is Gwalchmai the son of Gwyar." "Hold thy peace then," said the earl, "I will go in." And the earl was joyful concerning Gwalchmai. "Ha! chieftain," said he, "it was wrong of thee to come to my court, when thou knewest that thou didst slay my father; and though we cannot avenge him, Heaven will avenge him upon thee." "My soul," said Gwalchmai, "thus it is; I came not here either to acknowledge or to deny having slain thy father; but I am on a message from Arthur, and therefore do I crave the space of a year until I shall return from my embassy, and then, upon my faith, I will come back unto this palace, and do one of two things, either acknowledge it, or deny it." And the time was granted him willingly; and he remained there that night. And the next morning he rode forth. And the story relates nothing further of Gwalchmai respecting this adventure.

And Peredur rode forward. And he wandered over the whole island, seeking tidings of the black maiden, and he could meet with none. And he came to an unknown land, in the centre of a valley, watered by a river. And as he traversed the valley, he beheld a horseman coming towards him, and wearing the garments of a priest, and he besought his blessing. "Wretched man," said he,

"thou meritest no blessing, and thou wouldst not be profited by one, seeing that thou art clad in armour on such a day as this." "And what day is to-day," said Peredur. "To-day is Good Friday," he answered. "Chide me not, that I knew not this, seeing that it is a year to-day since I journeyed forth from my country." Then he dismounted, and led his horse in his hand. And he had not proceeded far along the high road before he came to a cross road, and the cross road traversed a wood. And on the other side of the wood he saw an unfortified castle, which appeared to be inhabited. And at the gate of the castle there met him the priest whom he had seen before, and he asked his blessing. "The blessing of Heaven be unto thee," said he, "it is more fitting to travel in thy present guise, than as thou wast erewhile; and this night thou shalt tarry with me." So he remained there that night.

And the next day Peredur sought to go forth. "To-day may no one journey. Thou shalt remain with me to-day and to-morrow, and the day following, and I will direct thee as best I may to the place which thou art seeking." And the fourth day Peredur sought to go forth, and he entreated the priest to tell him how he should find the Castle of Wonders. "What I know thereof, I will tell thee," he replied. "Go over yonder mountain, and on the other side of the mountain thou wilt come to a river, and in the valley wherein the river runs is a King's Palace, wherein the King sojourned during Easter. And if thou mayest have tidings any where of the Castle of Wonders, thou wilt have them there."

Then Peredur rode forward. And he came to the valley in which was the river, and there met him a number of men going to hunt, and in the midst of them was a man of exalted rank, and Peredur saluted him. "Choose, chieftain," said the man, "whether thou wilt go with me to the chase, or wilt proceed to my Palace, and I will dispatch one of my household to commend thee to my daughter, who is there, and who will entertain thee with food and liquor until I return from hunting; and whatever may be thine errand, such as I can obtain for thee, thou shalt gladly have." And the King sent a little yellow page with him as an attendant; and when they came to the palace, the lady had arisen, and was about to wash before meat. Peredur went forward, and she saluted him joyfully, and placed him by her side. And they took their repast. And whatsoever Peredur said unto her, she laughed loudly, so that all in the palace could hear. Then spoke the yellow page to the lady. "By my faith," said he, "this youth is already thy husband; or if he be not, thy mind and thy thoughts are set upon him." And the little yellow page went unto the King, and told him that it seemed to him that the youth whom he had met with was his daughter's husband, or if he were not so already, that he would shortly become so, unless he were cautious. "What is thy counsel in this matter, youth," said the King. "My counsel is," he replied, "that thou set strong men upon him, to seize him, until thou hast ascertained the truth respecting this." So he set strong men upon Peredur, who seized him, and cast him into prison. And the maiden went before her father, and asked him, wherefore he had caused the youth from Arthur's Court to be imprisoned. "In truth," he answered, "he shall not be free to-night, nor to-morrow, nor the day following, and he shall not come from where he is." She replied not to what the king had said, but she went to the youth. "Is it unpleasant to thee to be here?" said she. "I should not care, if I were not," he replied. "Thy couch and thy treatment shall be in no wise inferior to that of the king himself, and thou shalt have the best entertainment that the palace affords. And if it were more pleasing to thee that my couch should be here, that I might discourse with thee, it should be so, cheerfully." "This can I not refuse," said Peredur. And he remained in prison that night. And the maiden provided all that she had promised him.

And the next day Peredur heard a tumult in the town. "Tell me, fair maiden, what is that tumult?" said Peredur. "All the king's hosts and his forces have come to the town to-day." "And what seek they here?" he enquired. "There is an Earl near this place, who possesses two Earldoms, and is as powerful as a king; and an engagement will take place between them to-day." "I beseech thee," said Peredur, "to cause a horse and arms to be brought, that I may view the encounter, and I promise to come back to my prison again." "Gladly," said she "will I provide thee with horse and arms." So she gave him a horse and arms, and a bright scarlet robe of honour over his armour, and a yellow shield upon his shoulder. And he went to the combat; and as many of the Earl's men as encountered him that day, he overthrew; and he returned to his prison. And the maiden asked tidings of Peredur, and he answered her not a word. And she went and asked tidings of her father, and enquired who had acquitted himself best of the household. And he said that he knew not, but that it was a man with a scarlet robe of honour over his armour, and a yellow shield upon his shoulder. Then she smiled, and returned to where Peredur was, and did him great honour that night. And for three days did Peredur slay the Earl's men; and before any one could know who he was, he returned to his prison. And the fourth day Peredur slew the Earl himself. And the maiden went unto her father, and enquired of him the news. "I have good news for thee," said the King, "the Earl is slain, and I am the owner of his two Earldoms." "Knowest thou, lord, who slew him?" "I do not know," said the King. "It was the knight with the scarlet robe of honour, and the yellow shield." "Lord," said she, "I know who that is." "By Heaven," he exclaimed, "who is he?" "Lord," she replied, "he is the knight whom thou hast imprisoned." Then he went unto Peredur, and saluted him, and told him that he would reward the service he had done him, in any way he might desire. And when they went to meat, Peredur was placed beside the King, and the maiden on the other side of Peredur. "I will give thee," said the King, "my daughter in marriage, and half my kingdom with her, and the two Earldoms as a gift." "Heaven reward thee, lord," said Peredur, "but I came not here to woo." "What seekest thou then, chieftain?" "I am seeking tidings of the Castle of Wonders."

"Thy enterprise is greater, chieftain, than thou wilt wish to pursue," said the maiden, "nevertheless, tidings shalt thou have of the Castle, and thou shalt have a guide through my father's dominions, and a sufficiency of provisions for thy journey, for thou art, Oh chieftain, the man whom best I love." Then she said to him, "Go over yonder mountain, and thou wilt find a Lake, and in the middle of the Lake there is a Castle, and that is the Castle that is called the Castle of Wonders; and we know not what wonders are therein, but thus is it called."

And Peredur proceeded towards the Castle, and the gate of the Castle was open. And when he came to the hall, the door was open, and he entered. And he beheld a chessboard in the hall, and the chessmen were playing against each other, by themselves. And the side that he favoured lost the game, and thereupon the others set up a shout, as though they had been living men. And Peredur was wroth, and took the chessmen in his lap, and cast the chessboard into the lake. And when he had done thus, behold the black maiden came in, and she said to him, "The welcome of Heaven be not unto thee. Thou hadst rather do evil than good." "What complaint hast thou against me, maiden?" said Peredur. "That thou hast occasioned unto the Empress the loss of her chessboard, which she would not have lost for all her empire. And the way in which thou mayest recover the chessboard is, to repair to the Castle of Ysbidinongyl, where is a black man, who lays waste the dominions of the Empress; and if thou canst slay him, thou wilt recover the chessboard. But if thou goest there, thou wilt not return alive." "Wilt thou direct me thither?" said Peredur. "I will shew thee the way," she replied. So he went to the Castle of Ysbidinongyl, and he fought with the black man. And the black man besought mercy of Peredur. "Mercy will I grant thee," said he, "on condition that thou cause the chessboard to be restored to the place where it was when I entered the hall." "Then the maiden came to him, and said, "The malediction of Heaven attend thee for thy work, since thou hast left that monster alive, who lays waste all the possessions of the Empress." "I granted him his life," said Peredur, "that he might cause the chessboard to be restored." "The chessboard is not in the place where thou didst find it; go back, therefore, and slay him," answered she. So Peredur went back, and slew the black man. And when he returned to the palace, he found the black maiden there. "Ah! maiden," said Peredur, "where is the Empress?" "I declare to Heaven that thou wilt not see her now, unless thou dost slay the monster that is in yonder forest." "What monster is there?" "It is a stag that is as swift as the swiftest bird; and he has one horn in his forehead, as long as the shaft of a spear, and as sharp as whatever is sharpest. And he destroys the branches of the best trees in the forest, and he kills every animal that he meets with therein; and those that he does not slay perish of hunger. And what is worse than that, he comes every night, and drinks up the fish pond, and leaves the fishes exposed, so that for the most part they die before the water returns again." "Maiden," said Peredur, "wilt thou come and shew me this animal?" "Not so," said the maiden, "for he has not permitted any mortal to enter the forest for above a twelvemonth. Behold, here is a little dog belonging to the Empress, which will rouse the stag, and will chase him towards thee, and the stag will attack thee." Then the little dog went as a guide to Peredur, and roused the stag, and brought him towards the place where Peredur was. And the stag attacked Peredur, and he let him pass by him, and as he did so, he smote off his head with his sword. And while he was looking at the head of the stag, he saw a lady on horseback coming towards him. And she took the little dog in the lappet of her cap, and the head and the body of the stag lay before her. And around the stag's neck was a golden collar. "Ha! chieftain," said she, "uncourteously hast thou acted in slaying the fairest jewel that was in my dominions." "I was intreated so to do; and is there any way by which I can obtain thy friendship?" "There is," she replied. "Go thou forward unto yonder mountain, and there thou wilt find a grove; and in the grove there is a cromlech, do thou there challenge a man three times to fight, and thou shalt have my friendship."

So Peredur proceeded onward, and came to the side of the grove, and challenged any man to fight. And a black man arose from beneath the cromlech, mounted upon a bony horse, and both he and his horse were clad in huge rusty armour. And they fought. And as often as Peredur cast the black man to the earth, he would jump again into his saddle. And Peredur dismounted, and drew his sword; and thereupon the black man disappeared with Peredur's horse and his own, so that he could not gain sight of him a second time. And Peredur went along the mountain, and on the other side of the mountain he beheld a castle in the valley, wherein was a river. And he went to the castle; and as he entered it, he saw a hall, and the door of the hall was open, and he went in. And there he saw a lame grey-headed man sitting on one side of the hall, with Gwalchmai beside him. And Peredur beheld his horse, which the black man had taken, in the same stall with that of Gwalchmai. And they were glad concerning Peredur. And he went and seated himself on the other side of the hoary-headed man. Then, behold a yellow-haired youth came, and bent upon the knee before Peredur, and besought his friendship. "Lord," said the youth, "it was I that came in the form of the black maiden to Arthur's Court, and when thou didst throw down the chessboard, and when thou didst slay the black man of Ysbidinongyl, and when thou didst slay the stag, and when thou didst go to fight the black man of the cromlech. And I came with the bloody head in the salver, and with the lance that streamed with blood from the point to the hand, all along the shaft; and the head was thy cousin's, and he was killed by the sorceresses of Gloucester, who also lamed thine uncle; and I am thy cousin. And there is a prediction that thou art to avenge these things." Then Peredur and Gwalchmai took counsel, and sent to Arthur and his household, to beseech them to come against the sorceresses. And they began to fight with them, and one of the sorceresses slew one of Arthur's men before Peredur's face, and Peredur bad her forbear. And the sorceress slew a man before Peredur's face a second time, and a second time he forbad her. And the third time the sorceress slew a man before the face of Peredur, and then Peredur drew his sword, and smote the sorceress on the helmet; and all her head armour was split in two parts. And she set up a cry, and desired the other sorceresses to flee, and told them that this was Peredur, the man who had learnt Chivalry with them, and by whom they were destined to be slain. Then Arthur and his household fell upon the sorceresses, and slew the sorceresses of Gloucester every one. And thus is it related concerning the Castle of Wonders.

NOTES TO PEREDUR THE SON OF EVRAWC.

Peredur.—Page 297.

Of the real history of Peredur, nothing is known. It is probable that he fell in the battle of Cattraeth, in the beginning of the 6th Century, as Aneurin mentions a chieftain of this name among the slain.

"Gwyr a gryssyassant buant gyfneit.
Hoedyl vyrryon medwon uch med hidleit.
Gosgord vynydawc enwawc en reit.
Gwerth eu gwled o ved vu eu heneit.
Caradawc amadawc pyll ac yeuan;
Gwgawn a gwiawn. gwynn a chynvan.
Peredur arueu dur; gwawrdur ac aedan.
Achubyat eng gawr ysgwydawr angkymnan.
A chet lledessynt wy lladassan;
Neb y eu tymhyr nyt atcorsan."

Warriors marched forth,—unanimously they bounded forward;—
Short-lived were they,—they had revelled over the flowing mead;
The host of Mynyddawc renowned in battle;
Their life was the price of their banquet.
Caradawc, and Madawc, Pyll, and Yeuan,
Gwgawn, and Gwiawn, Gwynn, and Kynvan,
Peredur of steel arms, Gwawrdur, and Aedan.
A defence in the tumult, a shield in the conflict;
When they were slain they also slaughtered.
None to his home returned.

Peredur is frequently alluded to by the Bards of the Middle Ages, in terms illustrative of the high esteem in which his deeds of prowess then were held. Gruffydd ab Meredydd, who flourished about the end of the 13th Century, in his Elegy on Tudur ap Goronwy, one of the ancestors of the House of Tudor, mentions him in the following words:—

"Awdur hael eglur haul ogledd a lloer,
Oer yw cwympo dioer campau dewredd,
Eryr cyrchiad cad cydwedd Peredur,
Arf Eingl Dudur dadl diomedd."

O Bountiful Creator of the radiant sun and waning moon,
Sad is the fall of the chief of valiant deeds,
Eagle of the battle-charge, equal to Peredur,
Tudor, assaulter of the Angles, he who never shunned the fight.

In the old Romances, as Morte d'Arthur, &c. he is celebrated as one of those engaged in the quest of the Sangreal, in which character he is also spoken of in the Triads, together with Bort, the son of the King of that name, and Galath, the son of Lancelot du Lac.

"Tri Marchawg llys Arthur a gawsant y greal. Galath vab Lawnselot dy Lak, a Pheredur mab Efrawc Iarll, a Bort mab brenin Bort. Y ddeu gyntaf oeddynt wery o gorph a'r trydydd oedd ddiweir am na wnaeth pechawd cnawdol ond unweith a hynny drwy brofedigaeth yn yr amser yr ennillawdd ef * * * o ferch Brangor yr hon a fu Ymerodres yn Constinobl, or honn y doeth y genhedlaeth fwyaf o'r byd, ag o genhedlaeth Joseph o Arimathea y hanoeddyn ell tri, ac o lin Dafydd brophwyd mal y tystolaetha ystoria y Greal." Tri. lxi. Myv. Ar. ii. 14.

Like Owain, his exploits were sung by Chrestiens de Troyes, and they also form the subject of romantic compositions in German, and in other languages of Northern Europe.

Attending Tournaments.—Page 297.

We find various instances of knights, who made it a practice to resort to Tournaments as a lucrative occupation; for, on those occasions, not only the horse and arms of the vanquished frequently became the property of the victor, but the prizes contested for were often of so valuable a nature, as greatly to enrich those who were fortunate enough to win them. Sometimes they consisted of diamonds and precious stones, and sometimes even of the revenues of different domains.* In the Romance of Ipomydon, "a thousand pound" is the guerdon bestowed on the successful combatant. Our Henry the VII. proposed a ring of gold, set with a ruby, and another set with a diamond, as the reward of the knights who should be victorious at a Tournament, at which he was to be present.† And there is a characteristic story on record of the Chevalier Bayard, who being the conqueror on one of these occasions, refused to take the prize, which was a ruby worth a hundred ducats, attached to a lady's sleeve, saying that the honour of the victory was entirely due to the sleeve, for which he had contended. The ruby was accordingly presented to the knight who had acquitted himself best after Bayard, and the lady herself resumed possession of the sleeve, declaring that after what Bayard had said, she should keep it all her life for his sake.‡

Wars, and Combats.—Page 297.

From this passage we may probably infer that Evrawc was one of those knights, who, during the Middle Ages, ranked themselves under the banners of such princes as were disposed to engage their services. Many of these adventurers were held in high estimation; and Froissart, in speaking of sir John Hawkwood, who was one of the most distinguished of them, calls him "a right valiant English knight, who had performed many most gallant deeds of arms." He gives the following account of Hawkwood's progress, from which an idea may be formed of the emoluments that accrued to these mercenary bands, and of the manner in which they were employed.

"He had left France at the conclusion of the peace of Bretigny, and was at that time a poor knight, who thought it would not be of any advantage to him to return home; but when he saw, that by the treaties, all men at arms would be forced to leave France, he put himself at the head of those free companions called late-comers, and marched into Burgundy. Several such companions, composed of English, Gascons, Bretons, Germans, and of men from every nation, were collected there. Hawkwood was one of the principal leaders, with Bricquet and Carnelle, by whom the battle of Brignais was fought, and who aided Bernard de la Salle to take the Pont du St. Esprit.

"When they had harassed the country for some time, the marquis de Montferrat made a treaty with them to assist him in his war with the lords of Milan. This marquis led them over the Alps, after he had paid them sixty thousand francs, of which Hawkwood received, for himself and his troops, ten thousand. When they had finished the war for the marquis, the greater part of them returned to France; for sir Bertrand du Guesclin, the lords de la Marche, de Beaujeu, and sir Arnold d'Andreghen marshal of France, wished to lead them into Spain, to don Henry de Trastamare, against don Pedro king of Spain.

"Sir John Hawkwood and his companions remained in Italy, and were employed by pope Urban as long as he lived in his wars in the Milanese. Pope Gregory, successor to Urban, engaged him in the same manner. Sir John had also a profitable employment, under the lord de Coucy, against the count de Vertus and his barons; in which, some say, the lord de Coucy would have been slain, if sir John Hawkwood had not come to his assistance with five hundred combatants, which he was solely induced to do because the lord de Coucy had married one of the king of England's daughters. This sir John Hawkwood was a knight much inured to war, which he had long followed, and had gained great renown in Italy from his gallantry.

"The Romans, therefore, and Urban, who called himself pope, resolved, on Clement leaving Italy, to send for Hawkwood, and appoint him commander-in-chief of all their forces: they made him large offers of retaining him and his whole troop at a handsome subsidy, which he accepted, and acquitted himself loyally for it." Johnes's Froissart, 4to. vol. II. c. 97.

They are angels, my son.—Page 299.

Incidents similar to that in the text are of frequent occurrence in the old Romances. Joannes Damascenus, a Greek writer of the 9th Century, has a story of a youth brought up in utter ignorance of all wordly affairs, in order to evade a prophecy which existed against him. Here, however, the compliment paid by Peredur's mother to the knights, in calling them Angels, is far from being returned to her sex. For, in describing to him all the objects he meets on his first going out, and mixing with the world, the Greek writer makes the young man's father apply an appellation to the ladies, which is the very reverse of angelic.

There is another story to the same effect, in a Latin Collection of Materials for composing Sermons, by John Herolt, sirnamed Discipulus, a Dominican friar of Basil, who flourished about 1418.*

From these the idea has been adopted and worked up by the Italian Novelist.

Possess thyself of it, and give it to another.—Page 301.

The ideas of liberality entertained in the days of Chivalry, were often widely at variance with every principle of justice. That the advice given to Peredur by his mother was consistent with the feelings of the day, may be gathered from various passages in the works of contemporary writers. An amusing anecdote, illustrative of this, is thus quoted by Mr. Hallam, from Joinville's Collection des Mémoires, (I. 43.)

* Hist. Eng. Poe. I. ccxxiv. cclxv.

"He is speaking of Henry count of Champagne, who acquired, says he, very deservedly, the sirname of Liberal, and adduces the following proof of it:—

A poor knight implored of him on his knees one day as much money as would serve to marry his two daughters. One Arthault de Nogent, a rich burgess, willing to rid the count of this importunity, but rather awkward, we must own, in the turn of his argument, said to the petitioner; My lord has already given away so much that he has nothing left. Sir Villain, replied Henry, turning round to him, you do not speak truth, in saying that I have nothing left to give, when I have got yourself. Here, Sir Knight, I give you this man and warrant your possession of him. Then, says Joinville, the poor knight was not at all confounded, but seized hold of the burgess fast by the collar, and told him he should not go till he had ransomed himself. And in the end he was forced to pay a ransom of five hundred pounds. The simple-minded writer who brings this evidence of the count of Champagne's liberality is not at all struck with the facility of a virtue that is exercised at the cost of others."*

THROUGH MAGIC OR CHARMS.—PAGE 303.

THE dread of supernatural agency has in all ages exerted a powerful influence over the human mind. Even in the present day, instances are not wanting of men of the most approved natural courage, quailing with fear at the idea of an invisible enemy. It must, therefore, not be surprising, if, in less enlightened times, we find this superstitious feeling interfering still more generally with the common affairs of life. So decidedly was it acknowledged in the Middle Ages, that a solemn oath was required to be taken by every knight previous to his engaging in wager of battle, that he did not bear about him any charm or spell, and that he was not protected by magic or enchantment.

Between the neck and the shoulder.—Page 306.

It should seem that this was a favourite point of attack in the energetic encounters of those days; for in the Morte d'Arthur we meet with a similar expression to the above. It is stated, that when Arthur first assumed the government of Britain, several kings and knights would not acknowledge his authority, and assembled in order to oppose him. Believing their visit to have a friendly object, he sent them many valuable presents, which they refused to accept, rebuking "the messagers shamefully," and sending Arthur "word, they wold none of his yeftes. But that they were come to gyue hym yeftes with hard swerdys betwixt the neck and the sholders." B. I. c. 8.

Staple.—Page 311.

This was, probably, a staple for fastening horses to, as it is well known that the horses were often brought into the hall among the guests. In the account of the thirteen rarities of the Island of Britain, as enumerated in an unpublished MS. in the possession of Mr. Justice Bosanquet, it is said that one chieftain had the staple for holding his horse at the foot of his bed.

"Kebystr Klydno eiddvn a oedd mewn y stwffwl is drae i wely eddvnai y march a fynnai ynno ef ai kae."

The halter of Clydno Eiddyn, which was in a staple below the feet of his bed; and whatever horse he wished for in it, he would find there.

Spear of mighty size.—Page 312.

In the French Version of this tale, the spear here alluded to is said to have been the Holy Lance, and with it is brought in the celebrated Sangreal. The latter was the great object of research with the Knights of the Round Table, and its recovery was ultimately achieved by Percival of Wales, the Peredur ab Evrawc of Welsh Romance.

The third part.—Page 320.

This apportionment is strictly in accordance with ancient Welsh customs; for, by the Laws of Howel Dda, it appears the Master of the Royal Household and the Steward, (Penteulu and Distein,) were each entitled to a third part of certain fines there mentioned; to express which portion the same word (trayan) is used as in the present tale.

Gwalchmai.—Page 326.

Gwalchmai's reputation for courtesy and eloquence is here admirably kept up, and we find him fully entitled to the appellation of the Golden Tongued, so poetically bestowed upon him in the Triads. No less faithfully is Kai's character for the very opposite quality of detraction sustained.

Angharad Law Eurawc.—Page 330.

This name literally signifies Angharad with the Golden Hand, an epithet which was most probably bestowed on her, to designate her liberality.

Speak a word to any Christian again.—Page 330.

During the days of Chivalry, vows for the performance of some singular or romantic feat, of a similar nature with that mentioned in the text, were greatly in vogue. In an ancient French Poem, entitled Le Vœux du Héron, printed by St. Palaye, an amusing instance of this occurs.

Robert of Artois presents himself at the Court of Edward the III. and incites that Monarch to the conquest of France. One day he enters the hall in which the King and his courtiers are assembled, accompanied by musicians and two noble damsels, and bearing in great pomp a Heron, which he had killed, and which he ironically offers to Edward, as a compensation for the French crown. Edward, roused by the taunt, immediately swears upon the Heron, that the year shall not elapse without his entering France with fire and sword. His nobles follow his example. Among them is the Earl of Salisbury, who is seated by the daughter of the Earl of Derby, to whom he was devotedly attached. He asks the lady to lend him one of her fingers, and to place it upon his eye.

Si pri à la pucelle, de ceur dévotement,
Qu'elle me preste un doit de se main seulement,
Et methe sur mon œil destre parfaitement.

She is complaisant enough to grant him two fingers, which she puts upon his eye, so as to close it. Whereupon the Earl makes oath never more to open that eye, until he shall have done battle against the army of the French King. And this he faithfully performs.

In the same reign, Froissart mentions a number of young bachelors, who appeared with a bandage over one eye, which they had sworn to their ladies not to remove until they had distinguished themselves by some deed of prowess against the French.

Sitting on a bench.—Page 338.

Benches were formerly much more general than chairs. Wherever the latter are spoken of by our old English writers, it appears to have been as an article of luxury, and even of magnificence; and there is every reason to believe that they were far from being common, even in the houses of the great. No mention whatever is made of chairs in the catalogue of the furniture in the chamber of the Bishop of Winchester, in 1266, where benches or formæ, are, however, particularly enumerated.

"Et de i. mensa cum tressellis in camera dom. episcopi. Et v. formis in eadem camera."§

This is also the case in the inventory preserved of the goods belonging to Contarini, a rich Venetian trader, at his house in St. Botolph's Lane, A.D. 1481, and in that of the furniture of Skipton Castle, the great honour of the Earls of Cumberland, and one of the most splendid mansions of the North, A.D. 1572.‖

And the more general use of benches may be gathered from many passages in the elder Poets. In the Geste of King Horne, we find,—

"Horne sett him abenche."

And in Piers Plowman's Crede, the author, describing the luxury of the monks, tells us of > "An halle for an hygh kynge an houshold to holden,

> With brode bordes abouten, ybenched wel clene."

Ellis remarks, that "from this usage our court of King's Bench had its name."*

ADDANC.—PAGE 341.

IN the Triads, mention is made of the Addanc, or Avanc of the Lake, as an aquatic monster, which exercised a mysterious influence over some tremendous inundation, there alluded to and generally considered to have been the universal deluge, of which event most primitive nations have preserved a traditional recollection. The drawing of the Avanc from the Lake was an exploit performed by the horned Oxen of Hu Gadarn, or the Mighty, the hero who is recorded as having first conducted the nation of the Cymry into the Island of Britain. See Triad iv. Myv. Arch. ii. 57.

"Tri phrif Orchestwaith ynys Prydain: Llong Nefydd Naf Neifion, a ddug ynddi wryw a benyw o bob byw bann dorres Llynn Llion; ac Ychain Bannog Hu Gadarn, a lusgasant Afanc y llynn i dir ac ni thorres y llynn mwyach; a Main Gwyddon Ganhebon, lle y darllenid arnynt holl gelfyddydau a gwybodau Bŷd." And the stones of Gwyddon Ganhebon, on which were read all the arts and sciences of the world.

Howel the son of Emyr Llydaw.—Page 354.

Howel, the Prince of Llydaw, or Armorica, distinguished himself greatly in Arthur's wars against the Romans, and was one of the most strenuous in urging his Sovereign to resist their unjust claims. When Arthur was called suddenly home, by the news of Modred's treachery, he left Howel with part of his army in France, to secure his possessions in that Country.*

He was one of the three knights of Princely-bearing in Arthur's Court, who were so kind and gentle, and so courteous of demeanour, that it was difficult for any one in the world to refuse or deny them any thing they asked.

The St. Michael's Mount here alluded to is that in Normandy. Arthur went there with no other escort than his two Knights, Kai and Bedwer, and had the satisfaction of overcoming and slaying the Giant, who, from all the descriptions, must have been a most fierce and savage monster.

Chessmen were playing.—Page 365.

A chessboard and men possessed of similar qualities with those in the tale, belonged to Gwenddolen, the celebrated beauty of Arthur's Court, and are thus described:—

The Chessboard of Gwenddolen; when the men were placed upon it, they would play of themselves. The Chessboard was of gold, and the men of silver.

Something of the same kind occurs in the Romance of Sir Gaheret. That champion is entertained in the Enchanted Castle of a beautiful Fairy, who engages him in a party at Chess, in a large hall, where flags of black and white marble form the chequer, and the pieces, consisting of massive statues of gold and silver, move at the touch of the magic rod held by the player.

A similar adventure occurs in the Romance of Lancelot du Lac, 2nd Part, p. 101.†

MANUSCRIPT OF PEREDUR IN THE BOSANQUET COLLECTION.

The Mabinogi of Peredur also exists in the MS. Collection of Mr. Justice Bosanquet. It consists of forty two leaves, of which five are a Transcript from the Llyfr Coch o Hergest, the four first being wanting in the Original, and the fifth imperfect. This copy corresponds exactly with that of the Llyfr Coch in the narrative, and also, with the exception of trifling variations, in the style and wording. Of these slight differences, an idea may be formed, by comparing the annexed Fac-simile with the printed text, p. 247. The tale concludes with the following words,—"Ac felly y terfyna am gaer yr anryfeddodav ar ystori peredur fab Efrawg." Immediately after which, and without any mark of separation, there follows an account of the Eight Ages of the World. The remainder of the Volume which contains this tale, consists of various Welsh compositions, both in prose and verse.

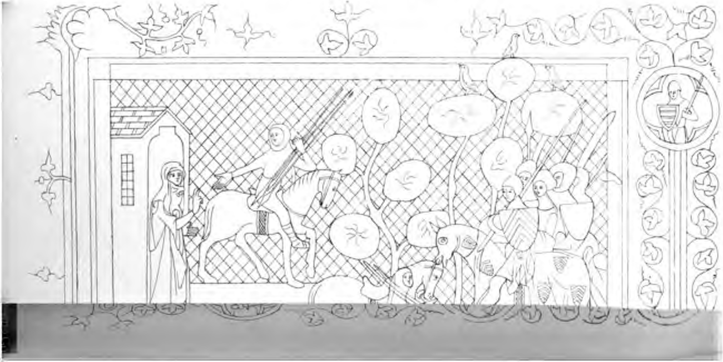
Perceval le Galois — French

Bibliothèque du Roi. M.S on vellum fol Supplement Francois 430



MANUSCRIPT OF PEREDUR IN THE CYMMRODORION LIBRARY.

The MS. from which the annexed Facsimile is taken, is preserved in the Library of the Cymmrodorion Society. It is a folio on paper, and considered to be in the hand-writing of Hugh Llyn, a bard, who lived in the middle of the 16th Century. It contains 335 pages, of which the Mabinogi of Peredur occupies 37. This Copy differs from that in the Llyfr Coch only in its phraseology and orthography. The rest of the volume consists of a Miscellaneous Collection of Poetry and Prose.

PERCEVAL LE GALOIS,

BY

CHRESTIEN DE TROYES.

The story of Peredur exists in the French language in two different forms, the first of which is a Metrical Romance, by Chrestien de Troyes, entitled Perceval le Galois. Of this several copies are deposited in the Bibliothéque du Roi, and a tracing of the Title page of one of them, (marked Supplement Français, 430,) is given in the annexed lithograph. The MS. from which it is copied is a folio upon vellum, splendidly illuminated, apparently of the 14th Century, and in excellent preservation. It contains 272 leaves, and is written in double columns. The titles of the Chapters are in red, and all the initial letters are in gold, surrounded by colours of blue and pink, with small designs in white. Altogether the poem consists of near 49,000 lines. On the title-page are the following words:—

"Ci conmence le ronmans de Perceual le Galois. Et deuise de moult de auentures qui li auindrent. Et cōment il conquesta les armes v'meilles.

Qui petit seim̄e petit queult
Et qui anques recueillir veult
En tel lieu sa semence espande
Que faire a cent doubles li tende
Car en terre qui riens ne uaut
Bonne semence seche et faut."

The author then proceeds to inform us that this Romance of Perceval le Galois was composed expressly for Philip, Count of Flanders, upon whom he gives a long panegyric, comparing him to Alexander, and stating that he lent him a book, from which he derived the materials for his work.

" Crestiens s'anime et fet semence dun romans que il en ɔmence
Et si le sanime en si bon leu
Quil ne puet estre sans grant preu
Quil le fet por le plus preudome

Crestiens qui entent et painne par le commandement le conte a commencier le meilleur conte qui soit contez en court royal ce est li livres du graal dont li quens li bailla le livre
Sotrez comment il se delivre."

The incidents with which the story commences are similar to those in Peredur, and are related nearly in the same order. His father is slain while Percival is yet an infant, and his mother brings him up in the strictest seclusion, and in complete ignorance of the commonest usages of society. Having, however, accidentally fallen in with some of Arthur's knights, the sight of their arms and accoutrements inspires him with chivalric ardour, and he quits his retirement to follow them to their Sovereign's court. His costume on setting out upon this his first expedition from home, was rude in the extreme, and is thus quaintly described,—

" De chennevas grosse chemise et braies faites a la guise de gales ou on fet ensemble braies et chauces ce me semble et si ot cote et chaperon dun cuir de cerf clos environ

Et sa sele li fu ja mise et par tout la ou il aloit les gavelos en volt porter

Mes ·II· len fist la mere oster pour ce que trop sembloit galois si eust elle fet tout trois"

After having visited Arthur's court, and slain the knight who had carried away the golden cup and who is the "Chevalier Vermeil" represented in the title-page, we find him, as in the Welsh Mabinogi, arriving at the palace of his uncle, here called "le roy Pescheeur." During the repast with which he is entertained, the Bleeding Lance and Graal are brought in.

Subsequently to this, Perceval achieves a variety of adventures, some of which more or less resemble those of Peredur, whilst others are entirely dissimilar. In order to shew how far the general incidents of the two compositions differ or agree, the prose headings of the different divisions of the Poem are subjoined. Of these divisions there are in all 51, each of which is illustrated in the MS. by an elaborate vignette.

PERCEVAL LE GALLOIS.

FRENCH PROSE VERSION.

We now proceed to examine the other French version of this very popular Tale. Of this version, which is in print, only one edition is known to have appeared, copies of which are now extremely scarce. The following particulars are taken from that preserved in the British Museum. This volume is of small folio size, and commences with the Title page, a facsimile of which is annexed. At the back of the Title page is "Le priuilege," which is dated Paris, March 20, 1529, and which purports to have been granted by the "Conseruateur" of the Royal privileges at the university of Paris. This document gives a copyright of six years to "Iehan longis et Iehan saincte denys Libraires a paris," who had it translated from rhyme into prose and modern language. Confiscation of the copies and an arbitrary fine, are moreover declared to be the penalty of any infringement of the copyright.

Following the privilege we find the table of contents giving the headings and substance of the various Chapters of the Romance. This occupies five pages, at the back of the last of which is a woodcut of a mounted Knight clad in armour.

Next in order is the "Elucidacion de Hlystoire du Graal" extending over seven pages, and divided into four chapters, the titles of which are as follows :—

¶ De la louable coustume introduyete par les pucelles anciennement au royaulme de Logres. & de leur malle aduẽture Par le roy Magons.

¶ La cause pour la quelle les cheualliers au temps du roy arthus deffendoient lhonneur des damoiselles. Et du p̄mier cheuallier pour elles vaincu. Et coē il leur estoit mescheu par la desloyaulte du roy magōs.

¶ Cy diuise le cōpte du graal & par quel cheuallier fut p̄mierement veuen la maison du roy peschor.

¶ Comment Bliocadras pere de Perceual le Galloys fust occis a ung tournoy publicque par le Roy de galles pers la gaste fontaine, ou on il fist des vaillances infinies au tournoy deuāt que le Roy de Galles & luy se combatissent.

At the end of the fourth chapter, it is stated—

"Cy apres vient le Prologue de cil qui redigea le cōpte en ancienne Rime Francoyse qui puis a este mis en tel escript comme vous le poues veoir a present."

The same woodcut of the Knight in armour is repeated at the back of the last page of the Elucidation, after which the "Prologue de l'acteur" begins. It is headed by a woodcut, representing a man sitting upon a chair, with his head resting on his hand, and surrounded on all sides by books.

The Prologue, with its woodcut, nearly fills two pages. It sets forth that Phillipe, Count of Flandres, caused, "Aucun docte orateur" to commence writing (rediger & mectre P escript) the history of "Perceual le Gallois suyuant la Chronique diceluy prince et traictie du Sainct greal." But that Phillipe having died before it was completed, "la treshaulte et excellente princesse Madame Jehañe contesse de Flādres," his descendant, caused it to be continued long afterwards by "ung sien familier orateur nom̄e Mennessier," who translated and finished the Chronicle in the manner it had been begun. It proceeds to state that the language, in which Meñessier wrote, being unknown, the present writer employed himself to "traduire and mectre de Rithme en prose familiere les faictz et vie dudict vertueux cheuallier Perceual en ensuyuant au plus pres selon ma possibilité et pouair le sens de mes predecesseurs translateurs."

After all this, we at length come to the Chronique itself, which extends over 220 leaves, or 440 pages, and is ushered in by the announcement, "Cy commence lhystoire Recreatiue cõtenãt les faictz & gestes du Trespreulz & vaillãt Perceual le Galoyos, Chevalier de la Table rõde." It consists of a series of adventures, corresponding with those in Crestiens de Troyes' Poem, from which in many instances it appears to have been rendered almost word for word.

The story concludes with Perceval's succession to the dominions and possessions of his uncle, the roy peschor. Among these are the Saint Greal, the holy lance and the "digne tailloir dargẽt." Thenceforth he spent his time in prayers and fastings, and mortification, and eat only what was furnished by the Saint Graal, which had the property of causing food to appear upon the table of him who possessed it; and when he died we read that "Perceual vray amy de dieu fust au palais aduentureux emporte ou a grand hoñeur a este inhume & en terre mis, aupres du bõ Roy Peschor & fust son cercueuil faict de fin or & de fin argẽt. Puis ont dess' la lame mis en lectres entaillees petites ou pareilles parolles furent. Cy gist Perceual le Galloys qui du sainct Graalles aduentures acheua. Ce sont les mots de lepitaphe. The volume terminates with the following words :—

"¶ Fin du Romant et Hystoire du preulx et vaillant Cheuallier Perceual le Galloys; Jadis Cheuallier de la Table rõde. Lequel acheua les aduentures du Sainct Graal. Auec auchuns faitz belliqueulz du noble cheuallier Gauuain. Et aultres Cheualliers estans au tẽps du noble Roy Arthus. ENGLISH METRICAL ROMANCE OF PERCIVAL.

Of the English metrical Romance of Percival, only one copy is known to be extant. It is contained in a very curious folio MS. on paper, belonging to the Library of Lincoln Cathedral, and which from the name of its transcriber, Robert de Thornton, a Monk, who lived in the 15th century, is commonly known by the name of the Thornton MS. Sir Frederick Madden, in his Introduction to the Romance of Sir Gawaine, gives a particular description of the MS. and its contents.

The metre, in which this Romance is written, is of a peculiar construction. The language is occasionally somewhat rude; but the story itself possesses more unity of design, and is conducted in a more systematic manner than is usual with compositions of this class.

The following are the opening lines of the Poem:—

"Gef lythes to me
Two wordes or thre
Of one y^{t} was faire & fre
And felle ī his fighte
His righte name was þcyvell he was ffosterde ī the felle he dranke wat^{r} of y^{e} welle
And yitt was he wyghte
His fadir was a noble man
Fro y^{e} tyme that he began
Miche wirchippe he wan
When he was made knyghte
In kyng Arthures haulle
Beste by luffede of alle
þcyvell thay gan hȳ calle
Who so redis ryghte."

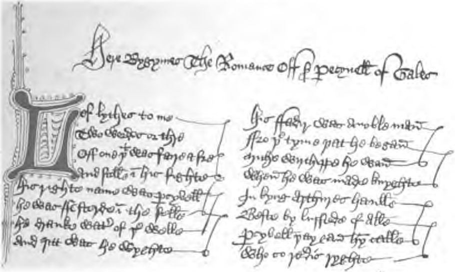
Percyvell of Galles. English.
Thornton MS in the Library of Lincoln Cathedral



King Arthur held the knight in such high esteem that he gave him his sister Acheflour in marriage, with a large dowry. But the happiness of the young couple was destined not to be of long duration, for Percival is slain by one styled, the "Rede Knight" in a jousting, which he had proclaimed in honour of the birth of his first born child, Percival, the hero of the tale. Acheflour, to prevent a similar fate befalling her young son, determines upon bringing him up where he has no chance even of hearing of arms and armour, and accordingly retires with him to the woods.

"Bot ī y^e^ wodde schall he be Sall he no thyng see
Bot y^e^ leues of the tree
And y^e^ greues graye
Schall he nowth^r^ take tent
To justes ne to to^r^nament
Bot in y^e^ wilde wodde went
With bestes to playe

With wilde bestes for to playe
Scho tuke hir leue & went hir waye
Bothe at Baron & at raye
And went to y^e^ wodde."

As he grew up, Percival's chief occupation consisted in shooting with "a lyttill Scottes spere," which was the only thing, "off all hir lordes faire gere," that Acheflour carried to the wood with her; in the use of this, he appears to have been very expert.

"He wolde schote w^t^ his spere
Bestes and oth^r^ gere
As many als he myghte bere
He was a gude knaue
Smalle birdes wolde he slo
Hertys hyndes also
Broghte his moder of thoo.
Thurte hir none craue

So wele he lernede hȳ to schote
Yᵉ was no beste yᵗ welke one fote
To fle fro hȳ was it no bote
When that he wolde hȳ haue

Euen when he wolde hȳ haue
Thus he wexe & wele thraue
And was reghte a gude knaue."

His costume while residing in these solitudes is described as being rude and grotesque in the extreme.

"The childe hadd no thyng yᵗ tyde
Yᵗ he mygte in his bones hyde
Bot a gaytes skynn
He was burely of body & yᵉ to rizt brade
One ayther halfe a skynn he hade
The hode was of yᵉ same made
Juste to yᵉ chynn.
His hode was juste to his chyn
Yᵉ flesche halfe tourned wᵗ in."

At the end of fifteen years, however, the whole current of his existence is changed by the circumstance of his one day meeting in the wood three Knights, "Of Arthrus Iū," Owain, Gawain, "And Kay yᵉ bolde Baratoᵉ." The result of this rencontre, as in the Mabinogi, is that Percival, "In gayte skynnes yᵗ was dyghte," sets out for Arthur's Court, in the hope of being knighted by that Sovereign. At this point of the narrative it is written,

"Here es a fytt of Percyuell of Galles."

On his way to the Court, Percival meets with an adventure, resembling that of the tent in Peredur. He comes to "an haulle" in which is provender for his steed, and where a repast is set out.

"He fande a brade borde sett
A bryghte fire wele bett
Brynnande yᵉ by

A mawnger yᵉ he fande
Corne yᵉ in lyggande
Yᵉ to his mere he bande
With the wythy
And to yᵉ borde gan he goo
Certayne that tyde
He fande a lofe of brede fyne
And a pychere wᵗ wyne
A mese of the kechyne
A knyfe yᵉ be syde."

After he has regaled himself, he passes on to an inner chamber, where he sees a "lady slepande on a bedde;" without awaking her, he draws a ring from her finger, and replaces it with one which he himself wore.

"Yᵉ he kyste yat swete thynge
Of hir fyngᵉ he tuke a rynge
His awenn modir takynnynge
He lefte with yat fre."

He then journies forward, and on his arrival at the Court, does not stop, "At gate dore ne wykett," but rides straight into the hall until his mare* "Kyste yᵉ forheuede of yᵉ kynge," who was sitting at meat, and had just been "Seruede of yᵉ firste mese." Percival is warmly welcomed by Sir Gawayne, who we are told, "Was yᵉ kynges trenchepayne," but his demeanour is most unseemly. He demands to be made a Knight in the most peremptory terms; and even threatens to slay Arthur, if his request be not immediately complied with. However,

"The kynge hȳ selfe vnderstode.
He was a wilde man."

* In the days of Chivalry it was deemed a disgrace to ride upon a mare, and no greater indignity could be inflicted on a recreant Knight than to cause him to be placed upon one. Percival is therefore doubtless represented as mounted on a mare, in order to add to the absurdity of the description of his appearance and equipments. See St. Palaye Mem. de Chev. I., 17. 42.

And guessing from his appearance, and the circumstances of his coming, that he must be the son of his widowed sister Acheflour, who had been brought up in the woods, he bears kindly with all want of courtesy, and promises to knight him if he will first dismount, and partake of his repast. Just as Percival has taken his place at the board, the Red Knight enters the hall.

"Prekande one a rede stede Blode rede was his wede" and carries off a cup of gold before the whole Court. This indignity Arthur most bitterly bewails,

"Fyve yeres hase he yus gane
And my coupes fro me tane
And my gude knyghte slayne
Men calde S^r^ peyuell
Sythen taken hase he three
And ay awaye will he bee
Or I may harnayse me
In felde hym to felle."

Percival on hearing this, without a moment's hesitation mounts his mare and follows the Red Knight, calling after him to restore the golden cup. The knight, marvelling doubtless at his strange array,

"putt his umbrere on highte
To by halde how he was dyghte."

and while he is threatening to throw his uncouth looking opponent into the pool, the young hero puts it out of his power to carry any more of his wicked designs into execution.

"Of schottyng was y^e^ childe slee
At y^e^ knyghte lete he flee
Smote hȳ in at ye eghe
And oute at y^e^ nakke

Ffor y^{e} dynt y^{t} he tuke
Oute of sadill he schoke
Who so y^{e} sothe will luke
And y^{r} was he slayne."

The difficulty now arises as to how to get him out of his armour, and Percival, after several vain attempts, at last bethinks himself of rather a curious expedient for effecting his object.

"He sayd my moder bad me
Whe̅n my dart solde broken be Owte of y^{e} Iren bren y^{e} tree
Now es me fyre gnede
Now he getis hy̅ flynt
His fyre Iren he hent and yen w^{t} owtten any stynt
He kyndilt a glede."

Sir Gawayne, however, rides up at this juncture, having followed him to see what would befall him; he assists him to disarm the Knight, arrays him in his gear, and mounts him on his charger. Resolved, however, that his preparations shall not be thrown away, Percival, before he quits the spot,

"..... tase y^{e} knyghte by y^{e} swire
Keste hy̅ reghte i̅ the fyre
Y^{e} Brandes to balde
Bot yen said pcyuell on bost
Ly still y^{r} in now and roste
The knyghte lygges y^{r} on brede
The childe es dighte i̅ his wede
And lepe vp apon his stede
Als hy selfe wolde."

Having confided the cup to Gawayne to be restored to his Sovereign, Percival sets forth in quest of adventures; and the next morning falls in with a witch, who is riding quietly along, and who, taking him, from his apparel, to be the Red Knight, addresses to him some words of courtesy. Without any very obvious reason, except her being a witch, a fact whereof he seems to have had an intuitive knowledge, he takes the old lady up upon his spear, and casts her into the fire which he had kindled for his opponent the day before.

"And righte so wolde he thare
Yat y^e^ olde wiche ware
Oppon his spere he hir bare
To y^e^ fyre agayne.
In ill wrethe & ī grete
he keste y^e^ wiche in y^e^ hete."

Soon after this Percival meets an old decrepit knight, and his nine sons, who also mistaking him for the Red Knight, their mortal foe, fly before him. When they discover their error, they are overjoyed to find that their enemy is slain, and entertain Percival at their Castle.

During his sojourn with the old Knight, who is, in fact, his uncle, a circumstance, however, of which neither of them is aware, a messenger stops at the gate, on his way to crave King Arthur's assistance for Lufamour, the fair Ruler of Maidenland, whom a cruel Sowdan has besieged in her Castle, after destroying all her relations. Percival sallies forth to her aid without delay, while the messenger proceeds on his errand. On reaching Lufamour's Castle, he finds that the Sowdan is absent on a hunting party, and he accordingly amuses himself in exterminating such of his army, as are left in the camp.

"Now he strykes for y^e^ nonys
Made y^e^ Sarazenes hede bones
Hoppe als dose hayle stones
Abowte one y^e^ gres
Thus he dalt yam on rawe
Till y^e^ daye gun dawe."

Percival, as may be easily imagined, feels somewhat weary, "When he" has "slayne so many men," so he dismounts, and lies in "a faire place," under a wall, where he falls asleep. In this situation, he is discovered in the morning by the watch, who tells the lady Lufamour, what he has seen. She immediately proceeds to the battlements, where her eyes are greeted also by the sight of the dead bodies of her adversaries strewed upon the plain ; and hereupon

"Sche calde appon hir chaymbirlayne
Was called hende hatlayne
The curtasye of Wawayne
He weldis in wane."

This courtly personage awakens Percival, and brings him before Lufamour, who welcomes her brave champion to her palace, where

"..... with owtten any let
To dyne gun thay dighte

The childe was sett on y^e^ dese
And serued with reches
I tell zow with owtten lese
Yat gaynely was get
In a chayere of golde."

Although they "felle to yaire fude," without delay, Percival "ne hade dyned bot smalle," when news is brought that a host of armed men are coming down upon the city, and "the comon belle gun knylle" to give the alarm. Percival leaps from the deis, runs to the stable where they had put his horse, and hesitates not to sally forth single handed against the approaching multitude, whom he destroys so easily, that—

"Yat day by heghe none
With all yat folke hade he done
One lefe lefte noghte one."

He then looks for other opponents, and sees four Knights riding towards him from the hill. One of these he encounters ; but finding ere long that his antagonist is no Sowdan, but his old ally, Sir Gawayne, who had first assisted him to don his armour, the combat ceases, and a most friendly greeting ensues. The other three Knights are Arthur himself, Sir Owain, and Sir Kai, who, with Sir Gawayne had come to Maidenland with the most amicable intentions. After this is explained, they all proceed together to the Palace. In a short time the Sowdan himself, whose name is Gollegotherame, arrives before the Castle, and is speedily overthrown by our hero, who thus becomes entitled to the hand of Lufamour "the brighte." King Arthur presides at the nuptials, and having conferred on Percival the honour of Knighthood, leaves him to sway the sceptre of Maidenland, and returns with his warriors to his own dominions.

His life glides away happily enough with his bride for a twelvemonth; but one morning at the end of that period, "Als he in his bedd lay," he bethinks him of his mother, and determines to proceed immediately to seek for her. Notwithstanding all the entreaties of Lufamour that he would wait—

"Till y^e^ heghe dayes of yole were gane," he sets out forthwith. He has not gone far before his attention is attracted by a loud wailing, which is made by a lady, whom he finds tied to a tree, and whom he politely releases from her unpleasant situation. She tells him that she is thus treated by her husband, the Black Knight, in consequence of her having had a ring taken from her finger in her sleep, by some one who left her another in place of it. It proves, of course, that the unknown author of her misfortunes was Percival himself, who it will be remembered, had exchanged rings with a sleeping lady, when on his way from his home in the woods, to the Court of Arthur. On the Black Knight's riding up, this is duly explained to his satisfaction, and peace is once more established between him and his wife. Percival now desires that the rings may be again exchanged, and that his own may be restored to him, since it had been a gift from his mother. And the Black Knight expresses the utmost regret that is not in his power to gratify his wishes, as he had taken the ring to the Lord of the land the moment he discovered it on the lady's finger. This Lord turns out to be a huge giant, the brother of the Sowdan Gollegotherame, and Percival proceeds to his stronghold to recover the ring from him. The Giant sees him coming, and calls to his porter,—

The Giant raises this formidable weapon to inflict a decisive blow, but Percival evades it, and the club sinks into the earth. He then takes advantage of the Giant being for the moment unguarded, and

" His honde he strykes hym fro His lefte fote also," at the same time remarking to him

" Yn myghte wt a lesse wande halfe weledid bettr thi hande
& hafe done the some gode."

After this he kills the Giant outright, and then proceeds to his Castle, and ransacks his treasures for the ring. On his finding it he is told by the porter, that it has, indeed, proved a most fatal Jewel, for that his master having offered it as a present to a lady, whose affections he desired to engage, she recognized it as a gift which she had bestowed upon her son, and, supposing that the youth must have been slain, she lost her senses forthwith, and fled into the woods. From this account, Percival is aware that the lady can be no other than his mother, Acheflour. He follows her into the woods, not on his charger, but on foot; and arrayed, not in his knightly accoutrements, but in a rustic dress, like that which he wore when he took his departure from her.

"His armo^{r} he leued y^{r} in Toke one hȳ a gayt skynne
& to y^{e} wodde gan he wyn."

After a search of nine days, he at length has the good fortune to find his mother; but she is quite mad, and it is not until she has been plunged into a deep sleep for three nights and three days by a potion, which the Giant's porter furnishes, that Acheflour is restored to her reason. When her recovery has been happily effected, her son takes her home with him to his kingdom, and the Poem concludes in the following manner:—

"Than s^{r} Pceuell in hy

"Explicit Sr Pcevell De Galles. Here endys yr Romance of Sr Pcevell of Gales Cosyn to Kyng Arthoure."

The Composition occupies near thirty pages, written in double columns. It begins at p. 161 of the MS. The facsimile here given of the commencing lines will shew the style of the handwriting.

This version of the history of Sir Percival, as will be observed, differs from all the others, in containing no allusion whatever to the bloody lance or to the San Graal.

It should seem as if Chaucer had this Poem in his mind when writing the Rime of Sire Thopas, where he makes use of expressions in allusion to our hero, nearly identical with those of the opening Stanza.

"Himself drank water of the well
As did the knight Sire Percivell
So worthy under wede."

Rime of Sire Thopas, Cant. Tales, 13844.

GERMAN VERSION OF PERCEVAL,

BY

WOLFRAM VON ESCHENBACH.

Amongst the various Romances of the Round Table, which found their way into Germany, none seems to have enjoyed a larger share of popularity than that of Perceval. It was translated from the French by Wolfram von Eschenbach, about the year 1200. Several Manuscript copies of this composition are in existence, and indeed, they are, perhaps, more numerous than those of any Poem of that class of literature, the Perceval being looked upon as Wolfram's chef d'œuvre. A printed edition of it appeared as early as the end of the 15th century, copies of which are now of extreme rarity. It is also comprised in Myller's Selection of Ancient Poems, which issued from the press at the end of the last century; but the best edition is that published with the other Poems of Wolfram von Eschenbach, by Karl Lachmann, Berlin, 1833. 8vo. There is also a translation of Perceval into Modern German, by Sann Marte, (the assumed name of Mons. Albert Schulz,) Magdeburg, 1836. 8vo. The groundwork of the story is the same in the German as in the Welsh; many differences of detail, however, occur, and the names of the characters introduced have little similarity. Thus the father of Perceval, (to whose History the first part of the Poem is devoted) bears the appellation of Gahmuret. His mother is called Herzeloyde. The "Syberw y Dyffryn," (in the French version L'orgueilleux de la lande) is Orilus de Lalander, and the lady in the tent, Jeschute. Ither de Gaheviez is the name bestowed upon the Knight whose armour Perceval appropriates to his own use; and Conduiramùr, Queen of Pelrapeire is the Lady of his love. Instead of the bleeding head in the charger, which in Peredur accompanies the marvellous lance, in the German, as in the French we find the San Graal introduced, upon the adventures of which the story then turns. The Graal was fabled to be the cup used at the last Supper, which St. Joseph of Arimathea brought over to Britain, filled with the sacred blood. Its acquisition (which could only be achieved by a Knight of perfect virtue) was supposed to bestow the highest earthly felicity, and the Poem concludes by Perceval's becoming, after a long series of adventures, its fortunate possessor.

ICELANDIC

SAGA OF PERCEVAL.

The Romance of Peredur, like others of the Arthurian Cyclus, was known in the North of Europe at an early period; it is found in the Icelandic under the title of the Saga of Perceval. Three facsimiles are annexed from different copies of this tale as it exists in that language.

Of these the first is from the Codex Arnæ Magnæanus, No. 179, a MS. in the Royal Library at Stockholm, folio on paper, copied about the middle of the 17th century, (probably from one of older date) by a Clergyman, named Ion Erlendson, who was employed to transcribe for Bryniulf Sveinsson, Bishop of Iceland. This MS. consists of 193 leaves. The contents are as follows:

Saga of Eriki Vidförla, Comráds Saga Keysarasonar, Bevus Saga, Ivents tháttr, Saga af Parceval Riddara, Valvers tháttr, Mirmanns Saga, Af Clarus Keysarasyni, (defect.) Af pielar Ióni Svipdagssyni, Flovent's Saga, Eli's Saga, Möttul's Saga.

The second, (which gives the conclusion of the Saga of Ivent, as well as the commencement of that of Perceval,) is also taken from a MS. in the Royal Library, at Stockholm, Codex Arnæ Magnæanus, No. 181. A. folio on paper. This Manuscript also contains, Artus Kappa Sögur, viz. Ivents Saga, Parceval Saga, and Valver's Saga.

It is written in double columns. Parceval Saga commences on the second column of page 520.

The third facsimile is from a MS. on paper in the British Museum. Add. MSS. 4859.
